Then all this earthy groſſneſs quit;
Attir'd with ſtars we ſhall for ever ſit,
Triumphing over death. Milton.
This being the firſt colour which vapours begin to reflect, it ought to be the colour of the fineſt and moſt tranſparent ſkies, in which vapours are not arrived to that groſſneſs requiſite to reflect other colours. Newton's Opticks.
For envy'd wit, like Sol eclips'd, makes known
Th' oppoſing body's groſſneſs, not it's own. Pope.

2 Inelegant fatneſs; unweildy corpulence.
Wiſe men, that be over-fat and fleſhy, go to ſojourn abroad at the temperate diet of ſome ſober man; and ſo, by little and little, eat away the groſſneſs that is in them. Aſcham.

3. Want of refinement; want of delicacy; intellectual coarſeneſs.
I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltineſs of my mind drove the groſſneſs of the foppery into a received belief that they were fairies. Shakſpeare.
Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at leaſt from the groſſneſs of thoſe faults I mentioned. Dryden.
What a groſſneſs is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears! Clariſſa.

GROT. n. ſ. [grotte, French; grotta, Ital.] A cave; a cavern for coolneſs and pleaſure.
In the remoteſt wood and lonely grot,
Certain to meet that worſt of evils, thought. Prior.
Awful ſee the Egerian grot. Pope.

GROTE'SQUE. adj. [groteſque, French; grotteſco, Italian.] Diſtorted of figure; unnatural; wildly formed.
The champaign head
Of a ſteep wilderneſs, whoſe hairy ſides
With thicket overgrown, groteſque and wild,
Acceſs deny'd. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.
There is yet a lower ſort of poetry and painting which is out of nature; for a face is that in poetry which groteſque is in a picture: the perſons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners falſe, that is, inconſiſting with the characters of mankind: groteſque painting is the juſt reſemblance of this. Dryden.
An hideous figure of their foes they drew,
Nor lines, nor looks, nor ſhades, nor colours true,
And this groteſque deſign expos'd to publick view. Dryden.
Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
Groteſco roofs and ſtucco floors. Pope.

GRO'TTO. n. ſ. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolneſs. It is not uſed properly of a dark horrid cavern.
Their careleſs chiefs to the cool grotto's run,
The bow'rs of kings, to ſhade them from the ſun. Dryden.
This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak. Woodward.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought
The wood began to move:
Within this three mile may you ſee it coming;
I ſay, a moving grove. Shakſpear.'s Macbeth.
Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales:
Thrice happy iſles! Milton.
Baniſh'd from courts and love,
Abandon'd truth ſeeks ſhelter in the grove. Granville.
Can fierce paſſions vex his breaſt,
While every gale is peace, and every grove
Is melody? Thomſon's Spring.

To GRO'VEL. v. n. [gruſde, Iſlandick, flat on the face. It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground fell.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.
The ſteel head paſſage wrought,
And through his ſhoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground
He groveling fell, all gored in his guſhing wound. Spenſer
What ſee'ſt thou there? king Henry's diadem,
Inchas'd with all the honours of the world!
If ſo, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the ſame. Shakſp.
Oke maſt and beech, and cornell fruit they eate,
Groveling like ſwine on earth, in fowleſt ſort. Chapman.
Now they lie
Groveling and proſtrate on yon lake of fire. Milton.
Upon thy belly groveling thou ſhalt go. Milton.
Let us then conclude that all painters ought to renounce this part of excellence; not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to ſhew themſelves: 'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.
I muſt diſclaim whate'er he can expreſs;
His groveling ſenſe will ſhew my paſſion leſs. Dryden.
Several thoughts may be natural which are low and groveling. Addiſon's Spectator.

GROUND. n. ſ. [grunb, Saxon; grondt, Daniſh.]

1. The earth, conſidered as ſuperficially extended, and therefore related to tillage, travel, habitation, or almoſt any action. The main maſs of terrene matter is never called the ground. We never diſtinguiſh the terraqueous globe into ground and water, but into earth, or land, and water; again, we never ſay under earth, but under ground.
Iſrael ſhall go on dry ground through the ſea. Exodus.
Man to till the ground
None was, and from the earth a dewy miſt
Went up, and water'd all the ground. Milton.

From the other hill
To their fix'd ſtation all in bright array,
The cherubim deſcended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous. Milton.
A black bituminous gurge
Boil up from under ground. Milton.
And yet ſo nimbly he would bound,
As if he ſcorn'd to touch the ground. Hudibras.

With clangs deſpis'd the ground. Milton.
Two late young Turnus the deluſion found;
Fat on the ſea, ſtill making from the ground.
Dryden's Æneid.

3. Land; country.
The water breaks its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds. Hudibras.

4. Region; territory.
On heav'nly ground they ſtood, and from the ſhore
They view'd the vaſt immeaſurable abyſs. Milton.
With theſe came they, who from the bord'ring flood
Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names
Of Baalim and Aſhtaroth. Milton's Parad. Loſt.

5. Eſtate; poſſeſſion.
Uneaſy ſtill within theſe narrow bounds,
Thy next deſign it on thy neighbour's grounds:
His crop invites, to full perfection grown;
Thy own ſeems thin, becauſe it is thy own. Dryd.

6. Land occupied.
The ſea o'erflow'd my ground,
And my beſt Flanders mare was drown'd. Mil.

7. The floor or level of the place.

Set by them cyder, verjuice, ſour-drink, or grounds. Mortimer.
Some inſiſt upon having had particular ſucceſs in ſtopping gangrenes, from the uſe of the grounds of ſtrong beer, mixed up with bread or oatmeal.
Sharp's Surgery.

9. The firſt ſtratum of paint upon which the figures are afterward painted.
We ſee the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with darkſome colours. Hakewill.
When ſolid bodies, ſenſible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and tranſparent grounds, as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters, and every other thing which is in motion and void of different objects: they ought to be more rough, and more diſtinguiſhable, than that with which they are encompaſſed. Dryden.

10. The fundamental ſubſtance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are ſupported.
O'er his head
A well-wrought heaven of ſilk and gold was ſpread,
Azure the ground, the ſun in gold ſhone bright.
Cowley.
Indeed it was but juſt that the fineſt lines in nature ſhould be drawn upon the moſt durable ground. Pope.
Then, wrought into the ſoul, let virtues ſhine,
The ground eternal, as the work divine. Young.

11. The plain ſong; the tune on which deſcants are raiſed.
Get a prayer-book in your hand,
And ſtand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll build a holy deſcant.
Shakſpeare's Richard III.

12. Firſt hint; firſt traces of an invention, that which gives occaſion to the reſt.
Though jealouſy of ſtate th' invention found,
Yet love refin'd upon the former ground;
That way the tyrant had reſerv'd to fly,
Purſuing hate, now ſerv'd to bring two lovers nigh. Dryden.

13. The firſt principles of knowledge.
The concords will eaſily be known, if the fore-ground be thoroughly beaten in. Prof. to Acad.
Here ſtateſmen, or of them they which can read,
May of their occupation find the grounds. Donne.
The grounds are already laid whereby that is unqueſtionably reſolved; for having granted that God gives ſufficient grace, yet when he co-operates moſt effectually, he doth it not irreſiſtibly.
Hammond.
After evening repaſts, 'till bed-time, their thoughts will be beſt taken up in the eaſy grounds of religion, and the ſtory of ſcripture.
Milton on Education.

14. The fundamental cauſe; the true reaſon; original principle.
He deſired the ſteward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident. Sidney.
Making happineſs the ground of his unhappineſs, and good news the argument of his ſorrow. Sid.
The uſe and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit the grounds and firſt original cauſes from whence they have ſprung be unknown. Hooker.
In the ſolution of the Sabbatizer's objection, my method ſhall be, to examine, in the firſt place, the main grounds and principles upon which he buildeth. White.
Thou could'ſt not have diſcern'd
Fraud in the ſerpent, ſpeaking as he ſpake,
No ground of enmity between us known. Milton.
Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the cauſes of their miſadventures.
Clarendon.
Sound judgment is the ground of writing well.
Roſcommon.
Love once given from her, and plac'd in you,
Would leave no ground I ever would be true.
Dryden.
It is not eaſy to imagine how any ſuch tradition could ariſe ſo early, and ſpread ſo univerſally, if there were not a real ground for it. Wilkins.
If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is ſome ground and reaſon for theſe fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpoſe. Tillotſon.
Thus it appears, that ſuits at law are not ſinful in themſelves, but may lawfully be uſed, if there is no unlawfulneſs in the ground and way of management. Kettlewell.
Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his ſentiments. Swift.
The miraculous increaſe of the profeſſors of chriſtianity was without any viſible grounds and cauſes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury.

15. The field or place of action.
Here was thy end decreed, when theſe men roſe;
And e'en with theirs this act thy death did bring;
Or haſten'd at the leaſt upon this ground. Dan.

16. The ſpace occupied by an army as they fight, advance, or retire.
At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to loſe ground. Sidney.
Heartleſs they fought, and quitted ſoon their ground,
While our's with eaſy victory were crown'd.
Dryden.
He has loſt ground at the latter end of the day, by purſuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Steenkerke. Dryden.

17. The intervening ſpace between the flyer and purſuer.
Ev'ning miſt,
Ris'n from a river, o'er the mariſh glides,
And gathers ground faſt at the labourer's heels,
Homeward returning. Milton's Parad. Loſt.

How that ungrateful charming maid
My pureſt paſſion has betray'd. Swift.

To conjecture rightly, or upon ſome juſt reaſon.
One may gueſs by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferiour deities, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not, might let them alone; but that himſelf had a right opinion concerning the true God Stillingfleet.

GUESS. v. a. To hit upon by accident, to determine rightly of any thing without certain direction of the judgment.
If Xerxes was able to call every common ſoldier by his name in his army, it may be gueſſed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his leſſons by heart. Locke.

UESS n. ſ. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgment without any poſitive or certain grounds.
The enemy's in view; draw up your powers:
Hard is the gueſs of their true ſtrength and forces. Shakſpeare.

His gueſſe was uſually as near to prophecy as any man's. Fell.

A poet muſt confeſs
His art's like phyſick, but a happy gueſs. Dryd
It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a leſs, upon uncertain gueſſes, before a due examination. Locke.

We may make ſome gueſs at the diſtinction of things, into thoſe that are according to, above, and contrary to reaſon. Locke.

This problem yet, this offspring of a gueſs,
Let us for once a child of truth confeſs. Prior.

No man is bleſt by accident, or gueſs,
True wiſdom is the price of happineſs. Young.

GUE'SSER. n. ſ. [from gueſs.] Conjecturer; one who judges without certain knowledge.
It is the opinion of divers good gueſſers, that the laſt fit will not be more violent than advantageous. Pope.

If fortune ſhould pleaſe but to take ſuch a crotchet,
To thee I apply, great Smedley's ſucceſſor,
To give thee lawn ſleeves, a mitre, and rochet,
Whom would'ſt thou reſemble? I leave thee a gueſſer. Swift.

GUE'SSINGLY. adv. [from gueſſing.] Conjecturally; uncertainly. Not in uſe.
I have a letter gueſſingly ſet down Shakſpeare.

GUIDE. n. ſ. [guide, Fr. from the verb.]
1. One who directs another in his way
Thou gaveſt them a burning pillar of fire to be a guide of the unknown journey. Wiſdom.

Can knowledge have no bound, but muſt advance
So far to make us wiſh for ignorance?
And rather in the dark to grope our way,
Than, led by a falſe guide, to err by day? Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.
While yet but young, his father dy'd,
And left him to an happy guide. Waller.

They have all the ſame paſtoral guides appointed, authoriſed, ſanctified, and ſet apart by the appointment of God by the direction of the ſpirit, to direct and lead the people of God in the ſame way of eternal ſalvation. Pearſon.

3. Director; regulator.
Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature? In him we live, move, and are. Thoſe things which nature is ſaid to do, are by divine art performed, uſing nature as an inſtrument: nor is there any ſuch knowledge divine in nature herſelf working, but in the guide of nature's work. Hooker.

Some truths are not by reaſon to be tried,
But we have ſure experience for our guide.
Dryden's Fables.

GUI'DELESS. adj. [from guide.] Having no guide; wanting a governour or ſuperintendent.
Th' ambitious Swede, like reſtleſs billows toſt,
Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd,
To his now guideleſs kingdom peace bequeath'd.
Dryden.

There fierce winds o'er duſky valleys blow,
Whoſe every puff bears empty ſhades away,
Which guideleſs in thoſe dark dominions ſtray.
Dryden.

GUI'DER. n. ſ. [from guide.] Director; regulator; guide. Obſolete.
Our guider come! to the Roman camp conduct us. Shakſpeare.

That perſon, that being provoked by exceſſive pain, thruſt his dagger into his body, and thereby, inſtead of reaching his vitals, opened an impoſthume, the unknown cauſe of all his pain, and ſo ſtabbed himſelf into perfect health and eaſe, ſurely had great reaſon to acknowledge chance for his chirurgeon, and providence for the guider of his hand. South.

Towards three or four o'clock
Look for the news that the guild hall affords.
Shakſpeare's Richard III.

In woollen cloth it appears, by thoſe ancient guilds that were ſettled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flouriſhed in that art. H. of Origin of Mankind.

As when the long-ear'd milky mothers wait
At ſome ſick miſer's triple bolted gate,
For their defrauded abſent foals they make
A moan ſo loud, that all the guild awake. Pope.

GUILE. n. ſ. [guille, gille, old French, the ſame with wile.] Deceitful cunning; inſidious artifice; miſchievous ſubtilty.

With fawning words he courted her awhile,
And looking lovely, and oft ſighing ſore,
Her conſtant heart did court with divers guile;
But words and looks, and ſigns ſhe did abhor.
Spenſer.

When I have moſt need to employ a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n,
When I am cold in zeal to you or yours. Shak.

We may, with more ſucceſsful hope, reſolve
To wage by force or guile eternal war. Milton.

Nor thou his malice and falſe guile contemn:
Subtile he needs muſt be who could ſeduce
Angels. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

GUI'LEFUL. adj. [guile and full.]

1. Wily; inſidious; miſchievouſly artful.

The way not to be inveigled by them that are ſo guileful through ſkill, is thoroughly to be inſtructed in that which maketh ſkilful againſt guile. Hooker.

HA'BITUDE n. ſ. [habitudo, Latin; habitude, French.]

1. Relation; reſpect; ſtate with regard to ſomething elſe.

We cannot conclude this complexion of nations from the vicinity or habitude they hold unto the ſun. Brown.

The will of God is like a ſtreight unalterable rule, but the various comportments of the creature, either thwarting this rule, or holding conformity to it, occaſions ſeveral habitudes of this rule unto it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

It reſults from the very nature of things, as they ſtand in ſuch a certain habitude, or relation to one another. South.

As by the objective part of perfect happineſs we underſtand that which is beſt and laſt, and to which all other things are to be referred, ſo by the formal part muſt be underſtood the beſt and laſt habitude of man toward that beſt object Norris.

In all the habitudes of life,
The friend, the parent, and the wife,
Variety we ſtill purſue Swift.

2. Familiarity; converſe; frequent intercourſe.

His knowledge in the nobleſt uſeful arts,
Was ſuch dead authors could not give;
But habitudes with thoſe who live. Denham.

To write well, one muſt have frequent habitudes with the beſt company.

3. Long cuſtom; habit; inveterate uſe. This is more properly habit.

Mankind is willing to continue in a pleaſing error, ſtrengthened by a long habitude. Dryden.

Thy ear, inur'd to charitable ſounds,
And pitying love, muſt feel the hateful wounds
Of jeſt obſcene, and vulgar ribaldry,
The ill-bred queſtion, and the loud reply,
Brought by long habitude from bad to worſe:
Muſt hear the frequent oath, the direful curſe. Prior.

4. The power of doing any thing acquired by frequent repetition.
It is impoſſible to gain an exact habitude without an infinite number of acts and perpetual practice. Dryden.

HA'BNAB. adv. [hap ne hap, or nap; as would nould, or ne would; will nill, or ne will; that is, let it happen or not.] At random; at the mercy of chance; without any rule or certainty of effect.
He circles draws, and ſquares,
With cyphers, aſtral characters,
Then looks 'em o'er to underſtand 'em,
Although ſet down habnab at random. Hudib.

To HACK. v. a. [haccan, Saxon; hacken, Dutch; hacher, French; from acaje, an axe, Saxon.]
1. To cut into ſmall pieces; to chop; to cut ſlightly with frequent blows; to mangle with unſkilful blows. It bears commonly ſome notion of contempt or malignity.
He put on that armour, whereof there was no one piece wanting, though hacked in ſome places, bewraying ſome fight not long ſince paſſed. Sidney.
What a ſlave art thou, to hack thy ſword as thou haſt done, and ſay it was in fight! Shakſ.
Richard the ſecond here was hack'd to death. Shakſpeare.
I'll fight 'till from my bones my fleſh be hack't. Shakſpeare.
One flouriſhing branch of his moſt royal root
Is hack'd down, and his ſummer leaves all faded,
By envy's hand, and murder's bloody axe. Shakſpeare
Burn me, hack me, hew me into pieces. Dryden
Nor the hack'd helmet, nor the duſty field,
But purple veſts, and flow'ry garlands pleaſe. Addiſon.
But ſate with butchers plac'd thy prieſtly ſtall,
Meek modern faith to murder, hack, and mawl Pope.
2. To ſpeak unreadily, or with heſitation.
Diſarm them, and let them queſtion: let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our Engliſh. Shakſpeare.

To HACK. v. n. To hackney; to turn hackney or proſtitute. Hanmer.

HA'CKLE. n. ſ. Raw ſilk; any ſlimſy ſubſtance unſpun.
Take the hackle of a cock, or capon's neck, or a plover's top: take off one ſide of the feather, and then take the hackle ſilk, gold or ſilver thread, and make theſe faſt at the bent of the hook. Walton's Angler.

To HA'CKLE. v. a. To dreſs flax.

1. A pacing horſe.
2. A hired horſe; hired horſes being uſually taught to pace, or recommended as good pacers.
Light and lewd perſons were as eaſily ſuborned to make an affidavit for money, as poſt-horſes and hackneys are taken to hire. Bacon.
Who mounted on a broom, the nag
And hackney of a Lapland hag,
In queſt of you came hither poſt. Hudibras.
3. A hireling; a proſtitute.
Three kingdoms rung
With his accumulative and hackney tongue. Roſcommon.
That is no more than every lover
Does from his hackney lady ſuffer. Hudibras.
Shall each ſpurgall'd hackney of the day,
Or each new penſion'd ſycophant pretend
To break my windows. Pope.
4. Any thing let out for hire.
A wit can ſtudy in the ſtreets;
Not quite ſo well, however, as one ought;
A hackney coach may chance to ſpoil a thought. Pope.
5. Much uſed; common.
Theſe notions young ſtudents in phyſick derive from their hackney authors. Harvey

To HA'CKNEY. v. a. [from the noun.] To practiſe in one thing; to accuſtom, as to the road.

This braniſh'd dagger
I'll bury to the haft in her falſe breaſt. Dryden.
Theſe extremities of the joints are the hafts and handles of the members. Dryden.
A needle is a ſimple body, being only made of ſteel; but a ſword is a compound, becauſe its haft or handle is made of materials different from the blade. Watts' Logick

To HAFT. v. a. [from the noun.] To ſet in a haft. Ainſworth.

HAG. n. ſ. [hægerre, a goblin, Saxon; heckle, a witch, Dutch.]
1. A fury; a ſhe-monſter.
Thus ſpoke th' impatient prince, and made a pauſe;
His ſtern hags rais'd their heads, and clapt their hands;
And all the powers of hell, in full applauſe,
Flouriſh'd their ſnakes, and toſt their flaming brands. Crashaw.
2. A witch; an enchantreſs.
Out of my door, you witch! you hag, you baggage, you polecat, you runnion. Shakſpeare
3. An old ugly woman.
Such affectations may become the young;
But thou old hag of threeſcore years and three,
Is ſhewing of thy parts in Greek for thee? Dryden

To HAG. v. a [from the noun.] To torment; to haraſs with vain terrour.
That makes them in the dark ſee viſions,
And hag themſelves with apparitions. Hudib.
How are ſuperſtitious men hagged out of their wits with the fancy of omens, tales, and viſions! L'Eſtrange

HA'GARD. adj. [hagard, French.]
1. Wild; untamed; irreclaimable.
As hagard hawks, preſuming to contend
With hardy fowl above his pitch might,
His weary pounces all in vain do'th ſpend,
To truſs the prey too heavy for his flight Fairy Queen

She's too diſdainful;
I know her ſpirits are as coy and wild,
As hagard as the rock. Shakſpeare.
2. [hager, German.] Lean; rugged; perhaps, ugly. To this ſenſe I have put the following paſſage; for the author ought to have written hagard.
A hagged cur is of a wolf, and a jolly ſort of dog, with good fleſh upon's back, feel into company together. Diſſertation.
3. Deformed with paſſion; wildly diſordered.
Fearful beſides of what in fight had paſs'd,
His hands and hagard eyes to heav'n he caſt. Dryden
Where are the courteous looks, the face now pale,
Now flaſhing red, the down-caſt hagard eyes,
Or fixt on earth, or ſlowly rais'd? Smith.

HA'GGARD. n. ſ.
1. Any thing wild or irreclaimable.
I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Ere three days paſs, which has as long lov'd me
As I have lov'd this proud diſdainful haggard. Shakſpeare.
2. A ſpecies of hawk.
Does the wild haggard tow'r into the ſky,
And to the ſouth by fly direction fly? Sandys.

To Hail. v. n. To pour down hail.

My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation when it shall hail, coming down on the forest. Isaiah.

Hail. interj. [hoel, health, Saxon: hail, therefore, is the same as salve of the Latins, or σῶσον of the Greeks, health be to you.] A term of salutation now used only in poetry; health be to you. It is used likewise to things inanimate.

Hail, hail, brave friend!
Say to the king the knowledge of the broil. Shakspeare.

Her sick head is bound about with clouds;
It does not look as it would have a hail,
Or heaven wish'd in it, as on other mornes. Ben Jonson.

The song [illegible]
Before'd, the [illegible] that on us'd
Long [illegible] May, 'cond Eve. Milton
Ha[illegible] happy fields,
Where joy for ever dwells! Hail horrors! hail
Infernal world! and thou profoundest hell
Receive thy new poss[illegible]! Milton

All hail, he cry'd thy country's grace and love;
Once more illustrious, now first of buds above. Dryden

Hail to the fair! from whose return in bliss
The cheerful hostess's arms new ladies take. Rowe.

To Hail. v. a. [from the noun.] To salute; to call to.

Hard hailstones fell and thicker on the plains,
Nor shaken oaks such show'rs of acorns fling. Dryden.

Hail. adj. [from hail.] Consisting of hail

From whose dark womb a rattling tempest pours,
Which the cold north congeals to hail showers. Pope

Hair. n. s. [hær, Saxon.]

1. One of the common teguments of the body. It is to be found upon all the parts of the body, except the soles of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hairs with a microscope, we find that they have each a round bulbous root, which lies pretty deep in the skin, and which draws their nourishment from the surrounding humours: that each hair consists of five or six others, wrapt up in a common tegument or tube. They grow as the nails do, each part near the root thrusting forward that which is immediately above it, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as plants grow. Quincy.

My fleece of woolly hair uncurls. Shakspeare.

Such the curiosity of hair only, on the skin be a mark of [illegible] internal constitution between a [illegible] and a drill? Locke

2. A single hair.

Naughty lady,
These hairs which thou do'st ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee. Shakspeare.

Much is breeding;
Which, like the courtier's hair, hath yet but life,
And not a serpent's poison. Shakspeare.

3. Any thing proverbially small.

Let us take it more
Or let's than just a pound; if the scale turn
But with the estimation of a hair,
Thou dieſt. Shakspeare. Merchant of Venice.

He judges to a hair of little indecencies, and knows better than any man what is not to be written. Dryden

4. Course; order; grain; the hair falling in a certain direction.

He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the hair of your profession. Shakspeare

Hairbell. n. s. A flower; the hyacinth.

Hairbrained. adj. [This should rather be written harebrained, unconstant, unsettled, wild as a hare.] Wild; irregular; unsteady.

Halcyon. n. s. [halcyo, Latin.] A bird, of which it is said that she breeds in the sea, and that there is always a calm during her incubation.

Such fawning rogues, as these, sooth every passion,
Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With every gale and vary of their masters. Shakspeare

Amidst our arms as quiet you shall lie,
As halcyons brooding on a winter sea. Dryden.

Halcyon. adj. [from the noun.] Placid; quiet; still; peaceful.

When great Augustus made war's tempest cease,
His halcyon days brought forth the arts of peace. Waller.

No man can expect eternal serenity or halcyon days from so incompetent and partial a cause, as the constant course of the sun in the equinoctial circle. Locke.

Hale. adj. [This should rather be written haul, from hæl, health.] Healthy; sound; hearty; well complexioned.

My feely sheep like well I know,
For they been hale enough I trow,
And like in their abode. Spenser.

Some of these wise partizans conclude, the government had hired two or three hundred hale men, to be pinioned, if not executed, as pretended captives. Addison.

After every three whole notes, nature requireth, for all harmonical uſe, one half note to be interpoſed. Bacon.

2. Concordant; muſical; proportioned to each other: leſs properly.

Harmonical ſounds, and diſcordant ſounds, are both active and poſitive; but blackneſs, and darkneſs are, indeed, but privatives. Bacon.

So ſwells each wind-pipe; aſs intones to aſs,
Harmonick twang of leather, horn and braſs. Pope.

HARMO'NIOUS. adj. [harmonieux, French, from harmony.]

1. Adapted to each other; having the parts proportioned to each other; ſymmetrical.

All the wide-extended ſky,
And all the harmonious worlds on high,
And Virgil's ſacred work ſhall dye. Cowley.

God has made the intellectual world harmonious and beautiful without us; but it will never come into our heads all at once; we muſt bring it home piece-meal. Locke.

2. Having ſounds concordant to each other; muſical; ſymphonious.

Thoughts that voluntary move harmonious numbers. Milton.

The verſe of Chaucer is not harmonious to us; they who lived with him, thought it muſical. Dryden.

HARMO'NIOUSLY. adv. [from harmonious.]

1. With juſt adaptation and proportion of parts to each other.

Not chaos like, together crush'd and bruis'd;
But as the world, harmoniously confus'd:
Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, they agree.
Pope.

That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom Bentley.

2. Musically; with concord of sounds.

If we look upon the world as a musical instrument, well-tuned, and harmoniously struck, we ought not to worship the instrument, but him that makes the musick. Stilling fleet.

HARMO'NIOUSNESS. n. s. [from harmonious.] Proportion; musicalness.

To HA'RMONIZE. v. a. [from harmony.] To adjust in fit proportions; to make musical.

Romanusq; lyrâ plaudat tibi, Barbarus harpâ. Ven. Fort.]

1. A lyre; an instrument strung with wire and commonly struck with the finger.

Arion, when through tempest cruel wreck
He forth was thrown into the greedy seas,
Through the sweet musick which his harp did make,
Allur'd a dolphin him from death to ease. Spens.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his work. Milton.

Nor wanted tuneful harp, nor vocal quire;
The muses sung, Apollo touch'd the lyre. Dryd.

2. A constellation.

Next shines the harp, and through the liquid skies
The shell, as lightest, first begins to rise;
This when sweet Orpheus struck, to list'ning rocks
He senses gave, and ears to wither'd oaks.
Creech.

To HARP. v. n. [harper, French, from the noun.]

1. To play on the harp.

I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps. Revelations.

Things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped? 1 Cor.

The helmed cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glitt'ring ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressive notes to heav'n's new-born heir. Milton

You harp a little too much upon one string.
Collier.

2. To touch any passion, as the harper touches a string; to dwell on a subject.

Gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear. Shakspeare.

For thy good caution, thanks:
Thou'st harp'd my fear aright. Shakspeare.

He seems
Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. Shakspear

HA'RPER. n. s. [from harp.] A player on the harp.

Never will trust to speeches penn'd,
Nor to the motion of a school-boy's tongue;
Nor wooe in rhime, like a blind harper's song.
Shakspeare.

I'm the god of the harp: stop my fairest;—in vain;
Nor the harp, nor the harper, could fetch her again. Tickell.

HA'RPING Iron. n. s. [from harpago, Latin.] A bearded dart with a line fastened to the handle, with which whales are struck and caught.

The boat which on the first assault did go,
Struck with a harping iron the younger foe:
Who, when he felt his side so rudely gor'd,
Loud as the sea that nourish'd him he roar'd.
Waller.

HARPONE'ER. n. s. [harponeur, French, from harpoon.] He that throws the harpoon in whalefishing.

Let the Volscians
Plow Rome, and harrow Italy. Shakspeare.

3. To tear up; to rip up.

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres. Shakspeare.

Imagine you behold me bound and scourg'd;
My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me groaning on the rending rack. Rowe.

4. To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. See HARRY, which in Scottish is the same thing.

As the king did excel in good common-wealth laws, so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners; and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather. Bacon.

5. To invade; to harass with incursions. [from hergian, Saxon.] Obsolete.

5. To distress; to perplex; to vex.

Leaving in pain their well-fed hungry eyes. Sidney.

My affairs
Do even drag me homeward. Shakſpeare.
Since ſuch love's natural ſtation is, may ſtill
My love deſcend, and journey down the hill,
Not panting after growing beauties; ſo
I ſhall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne
Look homeward, angel, now, and melt with ruth;
And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapleſs youth! Milton.
Like a long team of ſnowy ſwans on high,
Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid ſky,
Which homeward from their wat'ry paſtures horne,
They ſing, and Aſia's lakes their notes return. Dryden.

What now remains,
But that once more we tempt the watr'y plains,
And waud'ring homewards, ſeek our ſafety hence. Dryden.

Ho'MICIDE. n. ſ. [homicide, Fr. homicidium, Latin.]

1. Murder; manquelling.

The apoſtles command to abſtain from blood: conſtrue this according to the law of nature, and it will ſeem, that homicide only is forbidden; but conſtrue it in reference to the law of the Jews, about which the queſtion was, and it ſhall eaſily appear to have a clean other ſenſe, and a truer, when we expound it of eating, and not of ſhedding blood. Hooker.

2. Deſtruction. In the following lines it is not proper.

What wonder is't that black detraction thrives!
The homicide of names is leſs than lives. Dryd.

3. [homicide, Fr. homicida, Lat.] A murderer; a man-ſlayer.

I'd undertake the death of all the world,
So might I live one hour in your ſweet boſom.
——If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
Theſe nails ſhould rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakſpeare.
Hector comes, the homicide, to wield
His conq'ring arms, with corps to ſtrew the field. Dryden.

The troop forth iſſuing from the dark receſs,
With homicidal rage, the king oppreſs. Pope.

Homili'tical. adj. [ὁμιλητικὸς] Social; converſable.

His life was holy, and when he had leiſure for retirements, ſevere: his virtues active chiefly, and homiletical; not thoſe lazy ſullen ones of the cloyſter. Atterbury

Ho'MILY. n. ſ. [homilie, French; ὁμιλία.] A diſcourſe read to a congregation.

Homilies were a third kind of readings uſual in former times; a moſt commendable inſtitution, as well then to ſupply the caſual, as now the neceſſary defect of ſermons. Hooker.
What tedious homily of love have you wearied your pariſhioners withal, and never cried have patience, good people! Shakſp. As you like it
If we ſurvey the homilies of the ancient church we ſhall diſcern that, upon feſtival days, the ſubject of the homily was conſtantly the luſtfulneſs of the day. Hammond's Fundamentals

HOMOGE'NEAL. } adj. [homogene, Fr. ὁμογενὴς.]
HOMOGE'NEOUS. } Having the ſame nature or principles; ſuitable to each other.

The means of reduction, by the fire, is but by congregation of homogeneal parts. Bacon
Ice is a ſimilary body, and homogeneous concretion, whoſe material is properly water. Brown's Vulgar Errours
An homogeneous maſs of one kind is eaſily diſtinguiſhable from any other; gold from iron, ſulphur from allum, and ſo of the reſt. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory
The light, whoſe rays are all alike refrangible, I call ſimple, homogeneal, and ſimilar: and that whoſe rays are ſome more refrangible than others, I ſhall compound, heterogeneal, and diſſimilar. Newton

HOMOGE'NEALNESS. } n. ſ. [from homogeneous, or homogeneal.] Partici-
HOMOGENE'ITY. } pation of the ſame principles or nature;
HOMOGE'NEOUSNESS. } ſimilitude of kind.

The mixtures acquire a greater degree of ſimplicity and ſimilarity, or homogeneity of parts. Arbuthnot on Aliments
Upon this ſuppoſition of only different diameters it is impoſſible to account for the homogeneity or ſimilarity of the ſecerned liquors. Cheyne

Ho'MOGENY. n. s. [ὁμογενία.] Joint nature. Not uſed.

By the driving back of the principal ſpirits which preſerve the conſiſtence of the body, their government is diſſolved, and every part returneth to his nature or homogeny. Bacon

Homo'logous. adj. [homologue, French ὁμόλογος.] Having the ſame manner of proportions.

Homo'nymous. adj. [homonyme, French ὁμώνυμος.] Denominating different things; equivocal; ambiguous.

As words ſignifying the ſame thing are called ſynonymous, ſo equivocal words, or thoſe which ſignify ſeveral things, are called homonymous or ambiguous; and when perſons uſe ſuch ambiguous words with a deſign to deceive, it is called equivocation. Watts

Homo'nymy. n. ſ. [homonymie, French ὁμωνυμία.] Equivocation; ambiguity.

Homo'tonous. adj. [ὁμοτόνος.] Equable; ſaid of ſuch diſtempers as keep a conſtant tenour of riſe, ſtate, and declenſion Quincy

HO'NESTLY. adv. [from honeſt.]

1. Uprightly; juſtly.

It doth make me tremble,
There ſhould thoſe ſpirits yet breathe, that when they cannot Live honeſtly, would rather periſh baſely. Ben Jonſon.

For ſome time paſt all propoſals from private perſons to advance the public ſervice, however honeſtly and innocently deſigned, have been called flying in the king's face. Swift

2. With chaſtity; modeſtly.

HO'NESTY. n. s. [honneſté, Fr. honeſtus, Lat.] Juſtice; truth; virtue; purity.

Thou ſhalt not have thy huſband's lands.
—Why, then mine honeſty ſhall be my dower. Shakſpeare.

Goodneſs, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promiſe before their paſſions or their intereſt, and is properly the object of truſt, in our language, goes rather by the name of honeſty; though what we call an honeſt man, the Romans called a good man; and honeſty, in their language, as well as in French, rather ſignifies a compoſition of thoſe qualities which generally acquire honour and eſteem. Temple

HONEY. n. ſ. [hunig, Saxon; honig, Dutch; honec, honag, German.]

1. A thick, viſcous, fluid ſubſtance, of a whitiſh or yellowiſh colour, ſweet to the taſte, ſoluble in water; and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant ſmell. Hill.

Of honey, the firſt and fineſt kind is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragant ſmell: it is the firſt produce of the ſwarm, obtained by draining the combs without preſſing. The ſecond is often almoſt ſolid, procured by preſſure: and the worſt is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs, and then preſſing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the baſis in the petals, is ſecreted a ſweet juice, which the bee by means of its probolcis or trunk, ſucks up, and diſcharges again from the ſtomach, through the mouth into the comb. The honey depoſited in the comb, is deſtined for the young offſpring: but in hard ſeaſons the bees are reduced to the neceſſity of feeding on it themſelves. Hill.

So work the honey bees,
Creatures that by a ruling nature teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakſp.

Touching his education and firſt foſtering, ſome affirm, that he was fed by honey bees. Raleigh's Hiſtory.

In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as ſugar, and was not ſo luſcious as ours. Bacon.

When the patient is rich, there's no fear of phyſicians about him, as thick as waſps to a honey pot L'Eſtrange.

Honey is the moſt elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a moſt exquiſite vegetable ſope, reſolvent of the bile, balſamick, and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable ſpirit before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by diſtillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire. Arbuthnot

New wine, with honey temper'd milk we bring:
Then living waters from the cryſtal ſpring. Pope

2. Sweetneſs; luſciouſneſs.

The king hath found
Matter againſt him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language. Shakſpeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's ſpring, but ſorrow's fall. Shakſpeare

3. Sweet; ſweetneſs: a name of tenderneſs. [Mel; corculum.]

Honey, you ſhall be well deſir'd in Cyprus;
I've found great love amongſt them. Oh, my ſweet,
I prattle out of faſhion, and I dote. Shakſpeare

Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpoſe for thee. Dryden.

To HO'NEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk fondly.

Nay, but to live
In the rank ſweat of an inceſtuous bed,
Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love
Over the naſty ſty. Shakſpeare's Hamlet.

HO'NEY-BAG. n. ſ. [honey and bag.]

The honey-bag is the ſtomach, which bees always fill to ſatisfy, and to ſpare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept againſt winter. Grew's Muſæum.

HO'NEY-COMB. n. ſ. [honey and comb.] The cells of wax in which the bee ſtores her honey.

All theſe a milk-white honey-comb ſurround,
Which in the midſt the country banquet crown'd Dryden

HO'NEY-COMBED. adj. [honey and comb.] Spoken of a piece of ordnance flawed with little cavities by being ill caſt.

HO'NEY-DEW. n. ſ. [honey and dew.] Sweet dew.

There is a honey-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds inſects. Mortimer

How honey-dews embalm the fragrant morn,
And the fair oak with luſcious ſweets adorn. Garth.

HO'NEY-FLOWER. n. ſ. [melanthus, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a ſhrub. This plant produces large ſpikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black ſweet liquor, from whence it is ſuppoſed to derive its name. Miller.

HO'NEY-GNAT. n. ſ. [mellio, Latin; honey and gnat.] An inſect. Ainſworth.

HO'NEY-MOON. n. ſ. [honey and moon.] The firſt month after marriage when there is nothing but tenderneſs and pleaſure.

A man ſhould keep his finery for the latter ſeaſon of marriage, and not begin to dreſs till the honey-moon is over. Addiſon

HO'NEY-SUCKLE. n. ſ. [caprifolium, Lat.] Woodbine.

It hath a climbing ſtalk, which twiſts itſelf about whatſoever tree ſtands near it: the flowers are tubulous and oblong, conſiſting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermoſt of which is ſubdivided into two, and the lowermoſt is cut into many ſegments: the tube of the flowers is bent, ſomewhat reſembling a huntſman's horn. They are produced in cluſters, and are very ſweet. Miller enumerates ten ſpecies, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Bid her ſteal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-ſuckles, ripen'd by the ſun,
Forbid the ſun to enter; like to favourites
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Againſt the power that bred it. Shakſpeare.

Watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-ſuckle. Milton.

Then melſol beat and honey-ſuckles pound;
With theſe alluring ſavours ſtrew the ground. Dryden.

HO'NEY-WORT. n. ſ. [cerinthe, Lat.] A plant.

HO'NEYLESS. adj. [from honey.] Being without honey.

But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyleſs. Shakſpeare

The bee with honied thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth ſing. Milton.

2. Sweet; luſcious.

When he ſpeaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is ſtill;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To ſteal his ſweet and honied ſentences. Shakſp.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue

HO'NORARY. adj. [honorarius, Latin.]

1. Done in honour; made in honour.

There was probably ſome diſtinction made among the Romans between ſuch honorary arches erected to emperors, and thoſe that were raiſed to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addiſon.

This monument is only honorary, for the aſhes of the emperor lie elſewhere. Addiſon on Italy.

2. Conferring honour without gain.

The Romans abounded with little honorary rewards, that, without conferring wealth and riches, give only place and diſtinction to the perſon who received them. Addiſon.

HO'NOUR. n. ſ. [honeur, French; honor, Latin.]

1. Dignity; high rank.

2. Reputation; fame.

A man is an ill huſband of his honour, that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may diſgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Bacon.

3. The title of a man of rank. Not uſed.

Return unto thy lord,
Bid him not fear the ſeparated councils:
His honour and myſelf are at the one;
And at the other is my good friend Cateſby. Shakſpeare.

4. Subject of praiſe.

Thou happy father,
Think that the cleareſt gods, who make them honours
Of man's impoſſibilities, have preſerv'd thee. Shakſpeare.

5. Nobleneſs of mind; ſcorn of meanneſs; magnanimity.

Now ſhall I ſee thy love; what motive may
Be ſtronger with thee than the name of wife?
—That which upholdeth him, that thee upholds,
His honour. Oh, thine honour, Lewis; thine honour. Shakſpeare

If by honour is meant any thing diſtinct from conſcience, 'tis no more than a regard to the cenſure and eſteem of the world. Rogers.

6. Reverence; due veneration. To do honour is to treat with reverence.

They take thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to thy grave. Shakſp.

Tall ſhips of burden on its boſom bore. Dryden.

HOT. adj. [hat, Saxon; heet, Scottiſh.]

1. Having the power to excite the ſenſe of heat; contrary to cold; fiery.

What is thy name?
——Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.
—No, though thou call'ſt thyſelf a hotter name
Than any is in hell. Shakſpeare's Macbeth.

The great breezes which the motion of the air in great circles, ſuch as are under the girdle of the world, produceth, do refrigerate; and therefore, in thoſe parts, noon is nothing ſo hot as about nine in the forenoon. Bacon

Hot and cold were in one body fixt;
And ſoft with hard, and light with heavy mixt
Dryden

Black ſubſtances do ſooneſt of all others become hot in the ſun's light, and burn; which effect may proceed partly from the multitude of refractions in a little room, and partly from the commotion of ſo very ſmall corpuſcles. Newton.

2. Luſtful; lewd.

What hotter hours,
Unregiſter'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriouſly pick'd out. Shakſpeare.

Ten thouſand trifles light as theſe,
Nor can my rage nor anger move:
She ſhould be humble who would pleaſe,
And ſhe muſt ſuffer, who can love. Prior.

2. Low; not high; not great.

Th' example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow-poet, Cowley, mark!
Above the ſkies let thy proud muſick ſound,
Thy humble neſt build on the ground. Cowley.
Denied what ev'ry wretch obtains of fate,
An humble roof and an obſcure retreat. Yalden.
Ah! prince, hadſt thou but known the joys which dwell
With humbler fortunes, thou wouldſt curſe thy royalty!
Far humbler titles ſuit my loſt condition. Rowe.

To HU'MBLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make humble; to make ſubmiſſive; to make to bow down with humility.

Take this purge, thou whom the heav'nly plagues
Have humbled to all ſtrokes
The executioner
Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,
But firſt begs pardon.
Humble yourſelves under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you
Hezekiah humbled himſelf for the pride of his heart.
Why do I humble thus myſelf, and
For peace, to ſue nothing but to pleaſe

And firſt her huſband on the poop eſpies Dryd

If they ſlip eaſily, and are of a fit uſe to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid, and if it be apt to ſtick to things, it is humid.
Newton's Opticks.

HUMI'DITY. n. ſ. [humidité, Fr. from humid.] That quality which we call moiſture, or the power of wetting other bodies.

Humidity differs very much from fluidity, depending altogether on the congruity of the component particles of any liquor to the pores or ſurfaces of ſuch particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quickſilver is not a moiſt liquor, in reſpect to our hands or clothes, and many other things it will not ſtick to; but it may be called ſo in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whoſe ſurfaces it will preſently adhere. And even water itſelf, that wets almoſt every thing, and is the great ſtandard of humidity, is not capable of wetting every thing, for it ſtands and runs eaſily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbages and many other plants; and it will not wet the feathers of ducks, ſwans, and other water-fowl. Quincy

We'll uſe this unwholeſome humidity, this groſs watry pumpion. Shakſpeare

O bleſſing-breeding ſun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity, below thy ſiſter's orb
Infect the air! Shakſpeare's Timon of Athens

Young animals have more tender fibres, and more humid, than old animals, which have their juices more exalted and rectified. Arbuthnot

HUMILIA'TION. n. ſ. [French.]

1. Deſcent from greatneſs; act of humility.

The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of manhood; for which cauſe there followed upon the latter an exaltation of that which was humbled, for which cauſe he created the world, but reſtored it by obedience Hooker

Thy humiliation ſhall exalt
With thee thy manhood alſo to this throne. Milton

2. Mortification; external expreſſion of ſin and unworthineſs.

John fared poorly, according unto the apparel he wore, that is, of camel's hair, and the doctrine he preached was humiliation and repentance
Brown's Vulgar Errours

With tears
Wat'ring the ground, and with our ſighs the air
Frequenting, ſent from hearts contrite, in ſign
Of ſorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton

3. Abatement of pride.

It may ſerve for a great leſſon of humiliation to mankind, to behold the hatats and paſſions of men trampling over intereſt, friendſhip, honour, and their own perſonal ſafety, as well as that of their country. South

HUMI'LITY. n. ſ. [humilité, French.]

1. Freedom from pride; modeſty; not arrogance.

When we make profeſſion of our faith, we ſtand; when we acknowledge our ſins, or ſeek unto God for favour, we fall down; becauſe the geſture of conſtancy becometh us beſt in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

I do not know that Engliſhman alive,
With whom my ſoul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night,
I thank my God for my humility. Shakſpeare

What the height of a king tempteth to revenge, the humility of a chriſtian teacheth to forgive
King Charles

The humility of the ſtyle gained the more many friends. Clarendon.

Humility to ſerve their pride, and ſeem
Humble upon their way, to be the prouder
At their with'd journey's end Denham

It is an eaſy matter to extol humility in the midſt of honour, or to begin a faſt after dinner
South

As high turrets for their airy ſcope,
Require foundations in proportion deep,
And lofty cedars as far upwards ſhoot,
As to the nether heavens they drive the root,
So low did her ſecure foundation lye,
She was not humble, but humbled low. Dryden

2. Act of ſubmiſſion.

With theſe humilities they ſaluted the young king, and by their bowing and bending gave him the preſent form D

Whoſe ſnowy ridge the roving Tartar bounds,
Diſlodging from a region ſcarce of prey
To gorge the fleſh of lambs or yearling kids
On hills where flocks are fed, flies toward the ſprings
Of Ganges or Hydaſpes, Indian ſtreams,
But in his way lights on the barren plains
Of Sericana, where Chineſes drive
With ſails and winds their cany waggons light:
So on this windy ſea of land, the fiend
Walk'd up and down alone bent on his prey,
Alone, for other creature in this place
Living or lifeleſs to be found was none,
None yet, but ſtore hereafter from the earth
Up hither like aereal vapours flew
Of all things tranſitory and vain, when ſin
With wantonneſs had filled all the place,
And round him thick the airy ſhapes did throng

The axis of the hyperbolical section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex. Harris.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbolas very eccentrick. Bentley

HY'PERBOLE. n. s. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερβολὴ.] A figure in rhetorick by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: He runs swifter than lightning. His possessions are fallen to dust. He was so gaunt, the case of a flagellet was a mansion for him. Shakesp.

Terms unsquar'd
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would seem hyperboles. Shakspeare.

Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation.
Shakspeare.

They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bestows upon its admired objects. Glanv.

Hyperboles, so daring and so bold,
Dislocating bounds, are yet by rules control'd;
Above the clouds, but yet within our sight,
They mount with treth, and make a tow'ring flight. Granville.

The common people understand raillery, or at least rhetorick, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a sense. Swift

HYPERBO'LICAL. } adj. [hyperbolique, Fr.
HYPERBO'LICK. } from hyperbola, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyperbola.

Cold ſtomachs are moſt benefited by ſuch as have a hypocriſie. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

HYPOCRISY. n. ſ. [ὑποκρισις, Gr. hypocriſie, Fr.]

An indigeſted green complexion, with hard and heavy, of a true liver colour, when broken. The leaf of the plant is thick and fleſhy; and much thicker at the top than towards the bottom. The ſtem riſes a foot high, but before they run to ſeed, the ſtem is expreſſed, and preſerved in ſugar. Hill.

HYPOCRISY. n. ſ. [ὑποκρισις, Fr. hypocriſie.] Diſſimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.

Neither did he ſpare to uſe hypocriſy here, Nor having ſcruples, were ſcrupulous; For he the ſanctified maſk put on, Left the profane ſhould ſee through the ſham. Dryden.

Hypocriſy is much more eligible than profeſſed wickedneſs, becauſe it is a kind of homage to virtue, and ſhews that ſhe is more amiable and honourable than vice, ſince men are aſhamed to appear what they would be thought to be. Addiſon's Spectator.

Some ſtrong paſſion, or intereſt, or vice, muſt be at the bottom of all hypocriſy, or elſe men would leave off a thing that made them uneaſy for nothing. South.

HYPOCRITE. n. ſ. [hypocrite, French; ὑποκριτης.]

1. A diſſembler in morality or religion.

He hearing ſo much, would not allow any diſcourſe to paſs, ſaying, I dare ſwear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shakeſpeare.

A wife man is ſcandaliſed at the folly, but not at an hypocrite; becauſe he diſcovers more weakneſs than wickedneſs in the former. Addiſon.

Fair hope is your's, if you the fact confeſs;
Your ſilence argues you a hypocrite. Dryden.

The naming of religion as the intereſt might increaſe by it, is a plain argument that he would be leaſt ſuſpected of hypocriſy, when the only hypocriſy in the affair would fall to his ſhare. Swift.

2. A diſſembler.

Be aware, ye hearers, the flatt'ring glaſs
Suffers no virtues but may paſs for leſs;
What daily ſpeck one ſhun, or virtue think,
Hateful as hell, and plac'd near ſtain'd ink. Denham.

And through intemp'rance grow a while ſincere. Philips.

HYPOCRITICAL. } adj. [from hypocrite.]
HYPOCRITICK. } Diſſembling; inſincere; appearing differently from the reality.

Now you are confeſſing your enormities, I believe by that hypocritical downcaſt look. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be eſteemed an hypocritical impoſture on the world; and to his utmoſt pleaſures, he will be preferred a reformiſt. Pope.

Let others ſhew their hypocritick face. Swift.

HYPOCRITICALLY. adv. [from hypocritical.] With diſſimulation; without ſincerity; falſely.

HYPOTHESIS. n. ſ. [hypotheſe, Fr. ὑποθεσις.] A ſuppoſition; a ſyſtem formed upon ſome principle not proved.

The mind coſts and turns the ſubject diligently in one thing to another, till at length it finds all the cauſes of a long and various hypotheſis together; it ſees how one part coheres with another, and to clears off all the appearing contradictions that ſeemed to the cauſes, and make the whole intelligible. South.

With imagin'd ſower agility
Lord of his new hypotheſis he reigns,
Purſues: how long? till forc'd to stop at the Vaſt Pole too, mighty thought, ſtartled, he ſtays,
Soon a new ſcheme, and other ſcenes begins. Prior.

HYPOTHETICAL. } adj. [hypothétique, Fr.
HYPOTHETICK. } from hypotheſis.] Including a ſuppoſition; conditional.

Our knowledge is not ſo properly abſolute as hypothetical, when propoſitions are aſſented to by the mind only as they are conſiſtent with ſome other propoſitions, as, if the ſun be fixed, it is conſtant to have. Watts.

HYPOTHETICALLY. adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon ſuppoſition; conditionally.

The only part where it may be ſaid to be hypothetically, is where it is ſuppoſed with reaſon and doubt, and hypothetically. Boyle.

2. Proceeding from diſorders in the womb.

Paſſions are ſometimes ſo violent as to produce hyſterick diſeaſes. Arbuthnot.

What can be more ridiculous than to ſuppoſe a woman's paſſions ſhould be raiſed into a hyſterick fit, becauſe a man has ſhaved off his beard? Addiſon.

HYSTERICKS. n. ſ. [ὑστερικος.] Hyſterical paſſion, ſuppoſed to proceed from diſorders in the womb.

I.

I, Is in Engliſh conſidered both as a vowel and conſonant; though, ſince the vowel and conſonant differ in their form as well as ſound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long ſound, as fine, thine, which is uſually marked with an e final; and a ſhort ſound, as fin, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the ſame ſound with the firſt i, or double e, as: thus field, yield, are ſpoken as feeld, yeeld, except friend, which is ſpoken as frend. Subjoined to o or e it makes them long. Subjoined to a makes a diphthong, as fail, neigh; and to a makes a ſhort ſound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or ſound compoſed of the ſounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the Engliſh language, as oil, coin. The ſound of i before another vowel, and at the end of a word is always expreſſed by y.

J conſonant has invariably the ſame ſound with that of g in giant, as jade, jet, jilt, jolt, juſt.

pronoun perſonal. [ik, Gothick; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch.

I, gen. me; plural we, gen. us.

ic me; pe, up.]

I do not like theſe ſeveral councils, I. Shakſp.

There is none greater in this houſe than I. Gen.

Be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid. Mat.

What ſhall I do to be for ever known,

And make thy age to come my own;

Shall like beaſts to common people dye,

Unleſs you write my elegy. Cowley.

Hence, and make room for me. Cowley.

When chance of buſineſs parts us two,

What do our ſouls, I wonder do? Cowley.

Thus, having paſs'd the night in fruitleſs pain,

To my longing friends return again. Dryden.

Or ought impatient we demand the day,

The day arrives, and for the night we pray.

Blackmore.

Me is in the following paſſage written for I.

There is but one man whom ſhe can have and that is me. Clariſſa.

I is more than once in Shakſpeare written for ay, or yes.

Hath Romeo ſlain himſelf? Say thou but I,

And that bare vowel, I, ſhall poiſon more

Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice. Shak.

Did your letters pierce the queen?

I, my lord; ſhe took 'em and read 'em in my preſence, and now and then an ample tear trill'd down. Shakſpeare.

JABBER. v. n. [gabieren, Dutch.] To talk idly: to prate without thinking; to chatter.

We ſcorn, for want of talk, to jabber parties. Swift.

6. A cup of waxed leather.

Dead wine, that ſmacks of the borracho, ſup

From a foul jack, or greaſy maple cup. Dryden.

7. A ſmall bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.

'Tis as true as one ſhould ſay, that a bowl equally poiſed, and thrown upon a plain bowling-green, will run neceſſarily in a direct motion; but it muſt be made with a bias, that is, a bowl ſhaped a little from a direct line, it may acquire a liberty of wind, and to run ſpontaneouſly to the jack. Bentley.

8. A part of the muſical inſtrument called a virginal.

In a virginal, as ſoon as ever the jack falleth, and toucheth the ſtring, the ſound ceaſeth Bacon.

So dilis ſaid' the air, encounter'd hills,

Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milton.

JADE. n. ſ. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Skinner derives it from gaad, a goad or ſpur.]

1. A horſe of no ſpirit; a hired horſe; a worthleſs nag.

Alas, what wights are theſe that load my heart!

I am as dull as winter-ſtarved ſheep,

Tir'd as a jade in over-laden cart. Sidney.

When they ſhould enter the bloody ſpur,

They tall like ſcreen, and, like deceitful jades,

Sink in the trial. Shakſpeare's Julius Cæſar.

Theſe lean men ſit like ſix candleſticks,

With torch-ſtaves in their hands, and their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the head and ſhoulders. Shakſpeare.

So have I ſeen ſome tired ſteed,

A weight beſides a coſtume carry,

While full five more he kick'd and ſtarr'd,

The lets the ſaddle and he ſtirr'd. Hudibras.

The players may come upon the trial to prove theſe to be jades that made ſport with him. Dryden.

Falſe fleſh has but help them to renew their race,

As, after ſtumbling, jades will mend their pace.

Pope.

2. A sorry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice.
Shall these, these old jades, pull the slave
Of youth, that you have, pass you Chapman.
But she, the cunning'st jade alive,
Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive. Stepney
Get in, huffy: now will I persuade this young jade, and discover the intrigue. Southern.
In diamonds, pearl, and rich brocades,
She flames the first of batter'd jades,
And flutters in her pride. Swift

3. A young woman: in irony and slight contempt.
You see now and then some handsome young jades among them; the fluts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Addison.

JADE. n. s. A species of stone.
The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is composed of a pale bluish grey, or ash-colour, and a pale green, not uniform. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant polish. It is used by the Turks for handles of sabres. Hill.

To JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary: applied originally to horses.
With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
We've jaded out o' the field. Shakspeare.
It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far. Bacon.
If fleet dragon's progeny at last
Proves jaded, and in frequent matches cast
His favour for the flattery we retain,
And no respect for the degen'rate strain. Dryden
The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Locke.
There are seasons when the brain is overtired or jaded with study or thinking; and upon some other occasions animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation. Watts.

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.
If we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
Farewell nobility. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

3. To employ in vile offices.
The honourable blood
Must not be shed by such a jaded groom. Shakſ.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.
I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me: for every reason excites to this. Shakſ.

To JADE. v. n. To lose spirit; to sink.
Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last: they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the prosecution. South.

JA'DISH. adj. [from jade.]
1. Vitious; bad, as a horse.
That hors'd us on their backs, to show us
A jadish trick at last, and throw us. Hudibras
When once the people get the jadish trick
Of throwing off their king, no ruler's safe.
Southern.

2. Unchaste; incontinent.
'Tis no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the humour takes her to be jadish, not all the locks and spies in nature can keep her honest. L'Estrange.

To JAGG. v. a. [gagare, Latin, slits or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.
Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagged on the sides. Bacon.
The jagging of parks and gillyflowers is like the serrosity of oak leaves; but they never have any small plain parts. Bacon.
The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the impetuous assaults, or the silent undermings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains. Bentley
An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagged. Watts

JAGG. n. s. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation.
The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jaggs or escallops, and curiously indented round the edges. Ray

JA'ILER. n. s. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a prison
Seeking many means to speak with her, and ever kept from it, as well because she shunned it, seeing and disdaining his mind, as because of her jealous jailers. Sidney.
This is as a jailer, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakſpeare
His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd,
There let him reign, the jailer of the wind;
With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call,
And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryden
Palamon, the prince knight,
Restless for woe, awoke before the light;
And, with his jailer's leave, desired to breathe
An air more welcome than the damp beneath.
Dryden

JAKES. n. s. [of uncertain etymology.] A house of office.
I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him Shakſp

Children generally hate to be idle; all the care then is, that their duty humour should be constantly employed in something of use to them. Locke.

Supposing, among a multitude embarked in the same vessel, there are several that in a tempest will rather perish than work, would it not be madness in the rest to stand idle, and rather chuse to sink than do more than comes to their share? Addison.

4. Useless; vain; ineffectual.

They astonish'd, all resistance lost,
All courage; down their idle weapons dropp'd. Milton.

And threat'ning France, plac'd like a painted Jove,
Held idle thunder in his lifted hand. Dryden.

Where was then
The power that guards the sacred lives of kings?
Why slept the lightning and the thunderbolts,
Or beat their idle rage on fields and trees,
When vengeance call'd 'em here? Dryden.

5. Unfruitful; barren; not productive of good.

Of antres vast, and deserts idle,
It was my hent to speak. Shakspeare. Othello.

The murmuring surge,
That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high. Shakspeare. King Lear.

He was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakspeare. King Lear.

6. Trifling; of no importance: as, an idle story.

Suffice it then, thou money god, quoth he,
That all thine idle offers I refute,
All that I need I have: what needeth me
To covet more than I have cause to use? Lady Queen.

This answer is both idle in regard of us, and repugnant to themselves. Hooker.

They are not, in our estimation, idle reproofs when the authors of needless innovations are opposed with such negatives, as that of Leo: how are these new devices brought in which our fathers never knew? Hooker.

His friend find'd scornful, and with proud contempt,
Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.

An idle reason lessens the weight of the good ones you gave before. Swift.

That it enchants my sense. Shakspeare.

Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed. Raleigh's History.

Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer,
Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Addison.

IMAGINA'TION. n. s. [imaginatio, Latin; imagination, French; from imagine.]

1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kind: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past, and of things present, or as if they were present: for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon.

Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its idea. Glanville.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination still pursues me. Milton.

Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away. Pope.

2. Conception; image in the mind; idea.

Sometimes despair darkens all her imaginations; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention Sidney.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shaksp.

Better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs,
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakspeare

His imaginations were often as just as they were bold and strong. Dennis.

3. Contrivance; scheme.

Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations against me. Lamentations.

4. An unsolid or fanciful opinion.

We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless; to which imagination, the idea of space, of itself, leads us. Locke.

IMA'GINATIVE. adj. [imaginatif, French; from imagine.] Fantastick; full of imagination.

Witches are imaginative, and believe oft times they do that which they do not. Bacon.

Lay fetters and restraints upon the imaginative and fantastick part, because our fancy is usually pleased with the entertainment of shadows and gauds. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To IMA'GINE. v. a. [imaginer, French; imaginor, Latin.]

1. To fancy; to paint in the mind.

Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed. Shakspeare.

Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings. Shakspeare.

What are our ideas of eternity and immensity but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imagined parts of duration and expansion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition? Locke

2. To scheme; to contrive.

They intended evil against thee, they imagined a mischievous device. Psalms.

IMA'GINER. n. s. [from imagine.] One who forms ideas.

The juggler took upon him to know that such an one should point in such a place at a garter that was held up; and full he did it, by first telling the imaginer, and after bidding the actor think. Bacon.

IMBE'CILE. adj. [imbecilis, Latin; imbecille, French.] Weak; feeble; wanting strength of either mind or body.

To IMBE'CILE. v. a. [from the adjective. This word is corruptly written embezzle.] To weaken a stock or fortune by clandestine expences or unjust appropriations.

IMBECI'LITY. n. s. [imbecillité, French.] Weakness; feebleness of mind or body.

A weak and imperfect rule argueth imbecility and imperfection. Hooker.

No imbecility of means can prejudice the truth of the promise of God herein. Hooker

We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves. Hooker.

That way we are contented to prove, which, being the worst in itself, is notwithstanding now, by reason of common imbecility, the fitter and likelier to be brooked. Hooker

Strength would be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son would strike his father dead. Shakspeare.

Imbecility, for sex and age, was such as they could not lift up a hand against them. King Charles.

When man was fallen, and had abandoned his primitive innocence, a strange imbecility immediately seized and laid hold of him. Woodward.

To IMBIBE. v. a. [imbibo, Latin; imbiber, French.]

1. To drink in; to draw in.

A pot of ashes will receive more hot water than cold, forasmuch as the warm water imbibeth more of the salt. Bacon.

The torrent mercilefs imbibes
Commissions, perquisites, and bribes. Swift.

Illumin'd wide,
The dewy-skirted clouds imbibe the sun.
Thomson's Autumn.

2. To admit into the mind.

Those, that have imbibed this error, have extended the influence of this belief to the whole gospel, which they will not allow to contain any thing but promises. Hammond.

It is not easy for the mind to put off those confused notions and prejudices it has imbibed from custom. Locke

Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and sets them free from many prejudices we are ready to imbibe concerning them. Watts.

3. To drench; to saturate; to soak.

This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampled, is necessary in English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth totally less and indissolvable in water, and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallick salt. Newton

IMBI'BER. n. s. [from imbibe.] That which drinks or sucks.

Salts are strong imbibers of sulphureous steams. Arbuthnot

IMBIBI'TION. n. s. [imbibition, Fr. from imbibe.] The act of sucking or drinking in.

Most powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil: the reason is the congruity of bodies, which maketh a perfecter imbibition and incorporation. Bacon.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance, but in moisture not; and to all madefaction there is required an imbibition. Bacon

A drop of oil, let fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest; many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected. Boyle.

To IMBI'TTER. v. a. [from bitter.]

1. To make bitter.

2. To deprive of pleasure; to make unhappy.

Let them extinguish their passions which imbitter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community. Addison.

An opening cloud reveals
An heav'nly form imbody'd, and array'd
With robes of light. Dryden

Though affinity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized spirits, yet is it more than our crib, and text's can bear without latitude. Glanville's Scepsis.

3. To bring together into one mass or company; to incorporate.

I by vow am so embodied yours,
That she which marries you must marry me. Shakspeare

Never saw they hosts, n in
Met such imbodied force as, nam'd with these,
Could merit more than that small infantry
Warr'd on by cranes. Milton's Paradise Lost

Under their head imbodied all in one. Milton.

Then Claudius came, who led a num'rous hand
Of troops imbodied, from the Sabine land. Dryd.

4. To enclose. Improper.

In those strata we often meet with the same metal or mineral imbodied in stone, or lodged in coal, that elsewhere we found in marle.
Woodward's Natural History.

That soon refresh'd him weary'd, and repair'd
What hunger, if aught hunger had impair'd,
Or thirst. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt th' approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.
In years he seem'd, but not impair'd by years.
Pope.

To IMPA'IR. v. n. To be lessened or worn out.

Flesh may impair, quoth he; but reason can repair. Fairy Queen.

IMPA'IR. n. s. [from the verb.] Diminution; decrease. Not used.

A loadstone, kept in undue position, that is, not lying on the meridian, or with its poles inverted, receives in longer time impair in activity and exchange of faces, and is more powerfully preserved by fite than dust or steel. Brown.

IMPA'IRMENT. n. s. [from impair.] Diminution; injury.

His posterity, at this distance, and after so perpetual impairment, cannot but condemn the poverty of Adam's conception, that thought to obscure himself from his Creator in the shade of the garden. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

IMPA'LPABLE. adj. [impalpable, French; in and palpable.] Not to be perceived by touch.

If beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out, it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness of the parts do make them easy to be put into motion. Boyle.

To IMPA'RADISE. v. a. [imparadiare, Italian.] To put in a place or state resembling paradise in felicity.

This imparadised neighbourhood made Solomane's soul cleave unto her both through the ivory case of her body, and the apparel which did over-cloud it. Sidney.

All my souls be
Imparadis'd in you, in whom alone
I understand, and grow, and see. Donne.
Thus these two,
Imparadis'd in one another's arms,
The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill
Of bliss on bliss. Milton's Paradise Lost.

IMPA'RITY. n. s. [imparitas, impar, Lat.]

1. Inequality; disproportion.

Some bodies are hard, some soft: the hardness is caused chiefly by the juxtaposition of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts. Bacon.

2. Oddness; indivisibility into equal parts.

What verity is there in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of man, by even and odd, and so by parity or imparity of letters in men's names, to determine misfortunes on either side of their bodies? Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To IMPA'RK. v. a. [in and park.] To enclose with a park; to sever from a common.

High state and honours to others impart,
But give me your heart. Dryden.

2. To make known; to show by words or tokens.

Gentle lady,
When first I did impart my love to you,
I freely told you, all the wealth I had Ran in my veins. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
As in confession for the ease of a man's heart, so secret men come to the knowledge of many things, while men rather discharge than impart their minds. Bacon.
Thou to me thy thoughts
Wast wont, I mine to thee was wont t' impart.
Milton.

3. To communicate; to grant as to a partaker.

I find thee knowing of thyself;
Expressing well the spirit within thee free,
My image, not imparted to the brute. Milton.

IMPA'RTIAL. adj. [impartial, Fr. in and partial.] Equitable; free from regard to party; indifferent; disinterested; equal in distribution of justice; just. It is used as well of actions as persons: an impartial judge; an impartial sentence.

Success I hope, and fate I cannot fear:
Alive or dead, I shall deserve a name;
Jove is impartial, and to both the same. Dryden.

IMPARTIA'LITY. n. s. [impartialité, Fr. from impartial.] Equitableness; justice; indifference.

A pious and well-disposed will gives not only diligence, but also impartiality to the understanding in its search into religion, which is absolutely necessary to give success unto our inquiries into truth; it being scarce possible for that man to hit the mark, whose eye is still glancing upon something beside it. South.

IMPA'RTIALLY. adv. [from impartial.] Equitably; with indifferent and unbiassed judgment; without regard to party or interest; justly; honestly.

Since the scripture promises eternal happiness and pardon of sin, upon the sole condition of faith and sincere obedience, it is evident, that he only can plead a title to such a pardon, whose conscience impartially tells him that he has performed the required condition. South.

IMPA'RTIBLE. adj. [impartible, French; from impart.] Communicable; that may be conferred or bestowed. This word is elegant, though used by few writers.

The same body may be conceived to be more or less impartible than it is active or heavy. Digby.

IMPA'SSABLE. adj. [in and passable.] Not to be passed; not admitting passage; impervious.

There are in America many high and impassable mountains, which are very rich. Raleigh.
Over this gulf
Impassable, impervious; let us try
To found a path from hell to that new world.
Milton.
When Alexander would have passed the Ganges, he was told by the Indians that all beyond it was either impassable marshes, or sandy deserts. Temple.

IMPASSIBI'LITY. n. s. [impassibilité, Fr. from impassible.] Exemption from suffering; insusceptibility of injury from external things.

Two divinities might have pleaded their prerogative of impassibility, or at least not have been wounded by any mortal hand. Dryden.

IMPA'SSIBLE. adj. [impassible, French; in and passio, Latin.] Incapable of suffering; exempt from the agency of external causes; exempt from pain.

If the upper soul check what is contented to by the will, in compliance with the flesh, and can then hope that, after a few years of sensuality, that rebellious servant shall be eternally cast off, drop into a perpetual impassible nothing, take a long progress in a land where all things are forgotten, this would be some colour. Hammond.
Secure of death, I should contemn thy dart,
Though naked, and impassible depart. Dryden.

IMPA'SSIBLENESS. n. s. [from impassible.] Impassibility; exemption from pain.

How shameless a partiality is it, thus to reserve all the sensualities of this world, and yet cry out for the impassibleness of the next? Decay of Piety.

IMPA'SSIONED. adj. [in and passion.] Disordered by passion.

So, standing, moving, or to height upgrown,
The tempter, all impassioned, thus began. Milton.

IMPA'SSIVE. adj. [in and passive.] Exempt from the agency of external causes.

She told him what those empty phantoms were;
Forms without bodies, and impassive air. Dryden.
Pale suns, unfelt at distance, roll away,
And on th' impassive ice the lightnings play.

IMPA'STED. adj. [in and paste.] Concreted as into paste. Not in use.

Horribly thick
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,
Bak'd and impasted with the parching fires. Shakspeare.

IMPA'TIENCE. n. s. [impatience, French; impatientia, Latin.]

1. Inability to suffer pain; rage under suffering.

All the power of his wits has given way to his impatience. Shakspeare's King Lear.

2. Vehemence of temper; heat of passion.

3. Inability to suffer delay; eagerness.

IMPA'TIENT. adj. [impatient, French; impatiens, Latin.]

1. Not able to endure; incapable to bear with of.

Fame, impatient of extremes, decays
Not more by envy than excess of praise. Pope.

2. Furious with pain; unable to bear pain.

The tortur'd savage turns around,
And flings about his foam, impatient of the wound.
Dryden.

3. Vehemently agitated by some passion or passion: with at before the occasion with of impatience is referred more to the thing, with at to the person.

To be impatient at the death of a person concerning whom it was certain he must die, is to mourn because thy friend was not born an angel. Taylor's Rule of Living Well.

4. Hot; hasty.

The impatient man will not give himself time to be informed of the matter that he hears. Locke on Education.

5. Eager; ardently desirous; not able to endure delay: with for before the thing desired.

The mighty Cæsar waits his vital hour,
Impatient for the world, and grudges Jove
His power. Dryden.
On the seas prepar'd the vessel stands,
Th' impatient mariner thy speed demands. Pope.

IMPA'TIENTLY. adv. [from impatient.]

1. With rage, under uneasiness.

2. Passionately; ardently.

He considered one thing to impatience, that he would not admit any thing else to be set in consideration. Clarendon.

3. Eagerly; with great desire.

To IMPATRONI'ZE. v. a. [impatroniser, Fr. in and patronize.] To gain to oneself the power of any sovereignty. The word is not usual.

The ambition of the French king was to make himself patronize himself of the dutchy. Bacon.

To IMPA'WN. v. a. [in and pawn.] To impignorate; to pawn; to give as a pledge; to pledge.

Go to the king, and let there be impawn'd
Some surety for a safe return again. Shakspeare.
Many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall invite us to;
Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,
How you awake our sleeping sword of war. Shakspeare.

To IMPEACH. v. a. [empecher, Fr.]

1. To hinder; to impede. The feudal is little in use.

Each door he opened without any breach; here was no bar to stop, no foe him to impeach. Spenser.

Yet in ſuch rule, that the Venetian law
Cannot impugn you. Shakſpeare.

I cannot think myſelf engaged to diſcourſe of lots, as to their nature, uſe, and allowableneſs; and that not only in matters of moment and buſineſs, but alſo of recreation, which is impugned by ſome, though better defended by others. South.

St. Herom reporteth, that he ſaw one of theſe in his time; but the truth hereof I will not raſhly impugn, or over-boldly affirm. Peacham.

IMPU'GNER. n. ſ. [from impugn.] One that attacks or invades.

IMPU'ISSANCE. n. ſ. [French.] Impotence; inability; weakneſs; feebleneſs.

As he would not truſt Ferdinando and Maximilian for ſupports of war, ſo the impuiſsance of the one, and the double proceeding of the other, lay fair for him for occaſions to accept of peace. Bacon's Henry VII.

IMPULSE. n. ſ. [impulſus, Latin.]

1. Communicated force; the effect of one body acting upon another.

If theſe little impulſes ſet the great wheels of devotion on work, the largeneſs and height of that ſhall not at all be prejudiced by the ſmallneſs of its occaſion. South.

Bodies produce ideas in us manifeſtly by impulſe. Locke.

Bodies, from the impulſe of a fluid, can only gravitate in proportion to their ſurfaces, and not according to their quantity of matter, which is contrary to experience. Cheyne.

2. Influence acting upon the mind; motive; idea impreſſed.

Meantime, by Jove's impulſe, Metiſcus arm'd, Succeeded Turnus. Dryden.

These were my natural impulses for the undertaking; but there was an accidental motive, which was full as forcible. Dryden.

Moses saw the bush burn without being consumed, and heard a voice out of it: this was something, besides finding an impulse upon his mind to go to Pharaoh, that he might bring his brethren out of Egypt. Locke.

3. Hostile impression.

Like two great rocks against the raging tide,
Unmov'd the two united chiefs abide,
Sustain the impulse, and receive the war. Prior.

IMPU'LSION. n. s. [impulsion, French; impulsus, Latin.]

1. The agency of body in motion upon body.

The motion in the minute parts of any solid body passeth without sound, for that sound that is heard sometimes is produced only by the breaking of the air, and not by the impulsion of the air. Bacon's Natural History.

To the impulsion there is requisite the force of the body that moveth, and the resistance of the body that is moved; and if the body be too great, it yieldeth too little; and if it be too small, it resisteth too little. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Influence operating upon the mind.

But thou didst plead
Divine impulsion, prompting how thou might'st
Find some occasion to infect our foes. Milton.

IMPU'LSIVE. adj. [impulsif, French; from impulse.] Having the power of impulse; moving; impellent.

Nature and duty bind him to obedience:
But those being placed in a lower sphere,
His fierce ambition, like the highest mover,
Has hurried with a strong impulsive motion
Against their proper course. Denham's Sophy.

What is the fountain or impulsive cause of this prevention of sin? It is merely free grace South.

Poor men! poor papers! we and they
Do some impulsive force obey,
And are but play'd with, do not play. Prior.

IMPU'NITY. n. s. [impunité, French; impunitas, Latin.] Freedom from punishment; exemption from punishment.

In the condition of subjects they will gladly continue, as long as they may be protected and justly governed, without oppression on the one side, or impunity on the other. Davies.

A general impunity would confirm them; for the vulgar will never believe, that there is a crime where they see no penalty. Addison.

Men, potent in the commonwealth, will employ their ill-gotten influence towards procuring impunity, or extorting undue favours for themselves or dependents. Atterbury.

IMPU'RE. adj. [impur, French; impurus, Latin.]

1. Defiled with guilt; unholy: of men.

No more can impure man retain and move
In that pure region of a worthy love,
Than earthly substance can unfore'd aspire,
And leave his nature to converse with fire. Donne.

2. Contrary to sanctity; unhallowed; unholy: of things.

Hypocrites austerely talk,
Condemning as impure what God has made
Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to all Milton.

3. Unchaste.

If black scandal, or foul-fac'd reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shakspeare.

One could not devise a more proper hell for an impure spirit, than that which Plato has touched upon. Addison.

4. Feculent; foul with extraneous mixtures; drossy.

IMPU'RELY. adv. [from impure.] With impurity.

To IMPU'RPLE. v. a. [empourprer, Fr. from purple.] To make red; to colour as with purple.

Now in loose garlands, thick thrown off the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of jaspar shone,
Impurpled with celestial roses, smil'd. Milton.

IMPU'TABLE. adj. [from impute.]

1. Chargeable upon any one; that of which one may be accused.

That first sort of foolishness is imputable to them. South.

2. Accusable; chargeable with a fault. Not proper.

If the wife departs from her husband, through any default of his, as on the account of cruelty, then he shall be compelled to allow her alimony, for the law deems her to be a dutiful wife as long as the fault lies at his door, and she is in no wise imputable. Ayliffe.

IMPU'TABLENESS. n. s. [from imputable.] The quality of being imputable.

'Tis necessary to the imputableness of an action that it be avoidable. Norris.

IMPUTA'TION. n. s. [imputation, French; from impute.]

1. Attribution of any thing: generally of ill.

Trust to me, Ulysses;
Our imputation shall be oddly pois'd
In this wild action. Shakspeare, Troilus and Cressida.

If a son that is sent by his father about merchandise, do fall into some lewd action, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father. Shakspeare.

To use intellections and volitions in the infinite essence, as hypothetics, is allowable; but a rigorous imputation is derogatory to him, and arrogant in us. Glanville's Scepsis.

I have formerly said that I could distinguish your writings from those of any others: 'tis now time to clear myself from any imputation of self-conceit on that subject. Dryden.

2. Sometimes of good.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakspeare.

3. Censure; reproach.

Whatsoever happens they also the least feel that scourge of vulgar imputation, which notwithstanding they deserve. Hooker.

Let us be careful to guard ourselves against the groundless imputations of our enemies, and to rise above them. Addison.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation upon this matter. Swift.

4. Hint; slight notice.

Anthonio is a good man.
— Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?
— No, no; my meaning is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Shakspeare.

IMPUTA'TIVE. adj. [from impute.] That may impute. Ainsworth.

To IMPUTE. v. a. [imputer, French; imputo, Latin.]

1. To charge upon; to attribute: generally ill; sometimes good.

It was imputed to him for righteousness. Re
Men in their innovations should follow th example of time, which innovateth but quietly and by degrees scarce to be perceived; for other wise whatsoever is new and unlooked for, ev mends some, and impairs others, and he that is holpen takes it for a fortune, and thanks the time; and he that is hurt for a wrong, imputes
it to the author. Bacon's Essays.

I made it by your persuasion, to satisfy thos who imputed it to folly. Temple.

Impute your dangers to our ignorance. Dryd.

This obscurity cannot be imputed to want o language in so great a master of style. Locke.

I have read a book imputed to lord Bathurst called a dissertation on parties. Swift.

2. To reckon to one what does not pro perly belong to him.

Thy merit
Imputed shall absolve them who renounce
Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds
Milton.

That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes.
Shakspeare.

Sir Edmund Courtney, and the haughty pro
late,
With many more confederates, are in arms.
Shakspeare.

Danger before, and in, and after the act,
You needs must grant is great. Daniel.

However it be in knowledge, I may truly say it is of no use at all in probabilities; for the assent there, being to be determined by the pre ponderancy, after a due weighing of all the proofs on both sides, nothing is to assist to aid the mind in that syllogism. Locke.

God hath made our eternal and temporal in terests, in most cases, very consistent. South.

None was so little in their friendships, or so much in that of those whom they loved, not abused. Duncon.

3. Noting the time.

When we would consider eternity a parte ante, what do we but, beginning from ourselves and the present time we are in, repeat in our minds
the ideas of years or ages past? Locke.

INA'RABLE. adj. [in and aro, Latin.] Not capable of tillage. Dict.

To INA'RCH. v. a. [in and arch.]

Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is uſed when the ſtock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and, having fitted it to that part of the ſtock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one ſide about three inches in length: after the ſame manner cut the ſtock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, ſo that they may join equally together that the ſap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the ſtock to admit it; ſo that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their ſlipping, and the graft will more cloſely unite with the ſtock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the ſtock: you ſhould fix a ſtake into the ground, to which that part of the ſtock, as alſo the graft, ſhould be faſtened, to prevent the wind from breaking them aſunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be ſufficiently united, and the graft may then be cut from the mother tree, obſerving to ſlope it off cloſe to the ſtock, and cover the joined parts with freſh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practiſed upon oranges, myrtles, jaſmines, walnuts, firs, and pines, which will not ſucceed by common grafting or budding. Miller.

INARTI'CULATE. adj. [inarticulé, Fr. in and articulate.] Not uttered with diſtinctneſs, like that of the ſyllables of human ſpeech.

Obſerve what inarticulate ſounds reſemble any of the particular letters. Holder.

And ſhake the yoke of inauſpicious ſtars
From this world-wearied fleſh Shakſpeare.
Though Heaven's inauſpicious eye
Lay black on Love's nativity,
Her eye a ſtrong appeal can give;
Beauty ſmiles, and love ſhall live. Crashaw.
The ſtars feel not the diſeaſes their inauſpicious influence produces. Boyle.
With inauſpicious love a wretched ſwain
Purſu'd the faireſt nymph of all the plain;
She plung'd him hopeleſs in a deep deſpair. Dryden.

INBE'ING. n. ſ. [in and being.] Inherence; inſeparableneſs.

When we ſay the bowl is round, the boy is witty, theſe are proper or inherent modes, for they have a ſort of inbeing in the ſubſtance itſelf, and do not ariſe from the addition of any other ſubſtance to it. Watts.

INBORN. adj. [in and born.] Innate; implanted by nature.

Led by ſenſe of good
Inborn to all, I ſought my needful food. Dryden.
All paſſions being inborn within us, we are almoſt equally judges of them. Dryden.

INDUCTION. n. f. [induction, French; inductio, Latin.]

1. Introduction; entrance; anciently preface.

These promises are fair, the parties sure,
And our induction full of prosperous hope. Shak.

Induction is when, from several particular propositions, we infer one general: as, the doctrine of the Socinians cannot be proved from the gospels, it cannot be proved from the acts of the apostles, it cannot be proved from the epistles, nor the book of revelations; therefore it cannot be proved from the New Testament. Watts' Logick.

The magnificent beginning is wonderful hard, for the things to be proved are full of fables, and new experiments can hardly be made but with extreme caution. Bacon.

Mathematical things scarcely capable of clear demonstration, conclusions in natural philosophy are proved by induction of experiments, things moral by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson.

Although the arguing from experiments and observations by induction be no demonstration of general conclusions, yet it is the best way of arguing which the nature of things admits of, and may be looked upon as so much the stronger by how much the induction is more general: and if no exception occur from phenomena, the conclusion may be general. Newton's Opticks.

He brought in a new way of arguing from induction, and that grounded upon observation and experiments. Baker.

3. The act or state of taking possession of an ecclesiastical living.

INDU'CTIVE. adj. [from induct.]

The angel, by whom God indu'd the waters of Bethesda with supernatural virtue, was not seen, yet the angel's presence was known by the waters. Hooker.

His pow'rs, with dreadful strength indu'd.
Chapman.

To INDULGE. v. a. [indulgeo, Lat.]

1. To encourage by compliance.

The lazy glutton tired at home will keep;
Indulge his sloth, and fatten with his food. Dryd.

2. To favour; to countenance; to favour. If the matter of indulgence be a single thing, it has with before it; if it be a habit, to or in. as, he indulged himself with a draught of wine; and, he indulged himself in shameful drunkenness.

Another was wont to indulge her daughters with dogs, squirrels, or birds; but then they must keep them well. Locke.

To live like those that have their hope in another life, implies that we indulge ourselves in the gratifications of this life very sparingly. Atterbury.

3. To grant not of right but favour.

Ancient privileges, indulged by our kings to their people, must not, without high reason, be revoked but by them to whom they were granted. Temple.

The virgin cut, and bright, indulg'd the day
To the brown cave, and hush'd the dreary way. Dryden.

But fierce among mankind to few there are,
Who will endure to plake a shark fare.
This much I will indulge those for thy sake,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryden's Juvenal.

My friend, indulge one labour more,
And such Alcides. Pope's Odyssey.

Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
Indulge, direct my rocket to the sight! Pope.

To INDU'LGE. v. n. [a Latinism not in use.] To be favourable; to give indulgence: with to.

He must, by no means expected, approve able the courtesy how much soever others of his rank may afford to the rest. Government of the Tongue.

1. To act upon by contagion; to affect with communicated qualities; to hurt by contagion; to taint; to poiſon; to pollute.

One of theſe fantaſtical mad infected [illegible] that children and muſicians call [illegible]
Than eyes, ſweet lady, have infected [illegible]
The nature of bad news infects the [illegible]

Ev'ry day
It would infect his ſpeech, that if the king
Should without iſſue die, he'd carry it ſo
To make the ſceptre his Shakſpeare.

Infected minds
To their deep pallows will themſelves confine [illegible]

The ſpeaks poignards, and every word ſtabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terrible looks, there were no living near her, ſhe would infect the north pole. Shakſpeare.

I am reſolv'd your ſoldiers
No more infected with my country's love
Do in my preſence uſe Shakſpeare.

The air of paradiſe did fan the houſe
And angels offic'd all: we know in heav'n
Infected Sion's daughter ſhall be whole Milton.

2. To fill with ſomething miſchievously contagious.

Infected be the air whereon they ride,
And damn'd all thoſe that truſt them Shakſpeare.

INFECTION. n. f. [infection, Fr. infectio, Latin.] Contagion; miſchief by communication; taint; poiſon.

Infection is that manner of communicating a diſeaſe by ſome effluvia, or particles which riſe off from diſtempered bodies, and mixing with the juices of others, occaſions the ſame diſorders as in the bodies they came from. Quincy.

What a ſtrange infuſion
Is fall'n into thy ear! Shakſpeare's Cymb.
The bleſſed gods
Purge all infections from our air, whilſt you
Do climate here. Shakſpeare's Winter's Tale.
Vouchſafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For theſe known evils, but to give me leave,
By circumſtance, to curſe thy curſed ſelf. Shakſ.
Hence,
Leſt that th' infection of his fortune take
Like hold on thee. Shakſp. King Lear.
The tranſmiſſion or emiſſion of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as miaſmas and infections, is, of all the reſt, the moſt corporeal, for withal there be a number of the ſe emiſſions both wholeſome and unwholeſome, that give no ſmell at all. Bacon.

INFE'CTIOUS. adj. [from infect.] Contagious; influencing by communicated qualities.
The moſt infectious peſtilence upon thee. Shakſ.
In a houſe,
Where the infectious peſtilence did reign.
Shakſpeare.
Some known diſeaſes are infectious, and others are not: thoſe that are infectious are ſuch as are chiefly in the ſpirits, and not ſo much in the humours, and therefore paſs eaſily from body to body: ſuch as peſtilences and lippitudes. Bacon.
Smells may have as much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diſeaſes; which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operations of ſome poiſons, that are received only by the ſmell. Temple.

INFE'CTIOUSLY. adv. [from infectious.] Contagiouſly.
The will dotes, that is inclinable
To what infectiouſly itſelf affects. Shakſpeare.

INFE'CTIOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from infectious.] The quality of being infectious; contagiouſneſs.

INFE'CTIVE. adj. [from infect.] Having the quality of acting by contagion.
Free love, well conſidered, hath an infective power. Sidney.

INFE'CUND. n. ſ. [infæcundus, Latin.] Unfruitful; infertile.
How ſafe and agreeable a conſervatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifeſt from their rotting, drying, or being rendered infecund in the water, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preſerved. Derham.

INFECU'NDITY. n. ſ. [infæcunditas, Lat.] Want of fertility; barrenneſs.

INFELI'CITY. n. ſ. [infelicité, French; infelicitas, Lat.] Unhappineſs; miſery; calamity.
Whatever is the ignorance and infelicity of the preſent ſtate, we were made wiſe and happy. Glanville.
Here is our great infelicity, that, when ſingle words ſignify complex ideas, one word can never diſtinctly manifeſt all the parts of a complex idea. Watts.

To INFE'R. v. a. [inferer, Fr. infero, Latin.]
1. To bring on; to induce.
Vomit, infer ſome ſmall detriment to the lungs. Harvey.
2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one propoſition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to ſee or ſuppoſe ſuch a connection of the two ideas of the inferred propoſition. Locke.
Yet what thou canſt attain, which beſt may ſerve
To glorify the Maker and infer
Thee alſo happier, ſhall not be with-held Thy hearing. Milton.

Great,
Or bright, infers not excellence: the earth,
Though in compariſon of heav'n ſo ſmall,
Nor glittering, may out-ſhine good content.
More plenty than the ſun, that barren ſhines.
Milton.
One would wonder how, from ſo differing premiſes, they ſhould all infer the ſame concluſion. Decay of Piety.
They have more opportunities than other men have of purchaſing public eſteem, by deſerving well of mankind, and ſuch opportunities will be infer obligations. Atterbury.
3. To offer; to produce. Not in uſe.
Follow'd his Chriſtian piety'd theorion,
Inferring arguments of mighty force. Shakſp.

INFERENCE. n. ſ. [inference, Fr. from infer.] Concluſion drawn from previous arguments.
Though it may chance to be right in the concluſion, it is yet unjuſt and unmaſterly in the way that of a ſcholar. Glanville.
Theſe inferences or concluſions are the reaſons of reaſoning, and the three propoſitions, taken all together, are called ſyllogiſm or argument. Locke.

INFE'RIBLE. adj. [from infer.] Deducible from premiſed grounds.
As ſimple miſtakes commonly beget falſhoods, ſo men from fallacious foundations, and improper headed mediums, erect concluſions no way inferible from our premiſes. Locke.

INFERIO'RITY. n. ſ. [infériorité, French, from inferiour.] Lower ſtate of dignity or value.
The language, though not of equal dignity, yet as near approaching to it as our modern barbariſm will allow, and therefore we are to reſt contented with that only inferiority which is not poſſibly to be remedied. Dryden.

INFE'RIOUR. adj. [inférieur, Latin, inferieur, French.]
1. Lower in place.
2. Lower in nation or rank of life: correlative to ſuperiour.
Render me more equal, or perhaps
Superiour, for inferiour who is free? Milton.
3. Lower in value or excellency.
The love of liberty with life is giv'n,
And life itſelf the inferiour gift of heav'n. Dryd.
I have added ſome original papers of my own, which, whether they are equal or inferiour to my other poems, an author is the moſt improper judge of. Dryden.
4. Subordinate.
General and fundamental truths in philoſophy, religion, and human life, conduct our thoughts into a thouſand inferiour and particular propoſitions. Watts.

INFE'RIOUR. n. ſ. [from the adjective.] One in a lower rank or ſtation than another.
A great perſon gets more by obliging his inferiours than by diſdaining him. South.

INFE'RNAL. adj. [infernal, French; infernus, Lat.] Hellish; tartarean; deteſtable.
His gigantick limbs with large embrace,
Infolds nine acres of infernal ſpace. Dryden.

INFE'RNAL Stone. n. ſ.
Infernal ſtone, or the lunar cauſtick, is prepared from an evaporated ſolution of ſilver, or from cryſtals of ſilver. It is a very powerful cauſtick, eating away the fleſh and even the bones to which it is applied. Hill's Mat. Med.

INFE'RTILE. adj. [infertile, Fr. in and fertile.] Unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity; infecund.
Ignorance being of itſelf, like ſtiff clay, and infertile ſoil, when fire comes to ſcorch and harden it, it grows perfectly impenetrable. Government of the Tongue.

INFERTI'LITY. n. ſ. [infertilité, Fr. from infertile.] Unfruitfulneſs; want of fertility.
The ſame diſtemperature of the air that occaſioned the plague, occaſioned the infertility or moſtneſs of the ſoil, whereby the fruits of the earth became either very ſcarce, or very unwholeſome. Bp. Chandler of Medicine.

To INFE'ST. v. a. [infeſter, French; infeſto, Lat.] To harraſs; to diſturb; to plague.
Unto my mother's proper ſon,
Come greedily, I pray, with double love
Wherewith the ſtepdame uſed to infeſt,
And hearts of greateſt hatred doubled on.
Sidney.
They ceaſed not in the ſame purſuit, to fire and ſpoil that part which had not yet revolted, and to infeſt by all means, under colour of other grounds, their own adverſaries in this caſe. Bacon.
When both by wrong a people infeſted, and injuries not to be endured, yet would the ſame have ſuffered them to work their own ruin of their own accord, and by patience become maſters of their own. Hooker.
Here were no uſual, diſeaſed, or ſeaſons peſtilent, but fed to man for nouriſhment, but of ſo good quality, as if the earth had not been infeſted with ſin, but to ſerve and nouriſh him. Wisdom of Solomon Paraphraſed.
Fleas, antics, fairies, and ſuch like, with the like toys and pedlar's ware, human life infeſted. Addiſon.
Nor are we merely ſunk and overwhelmed in its ſymptoms and effects. Atterbury on Dut.

INFESTIVITY. n. ſ. [in and feſtivity.] Moroſeneſs; want of cheerfulneſs.

INFE'STERED. adj. [in and feſter.] Rankling; inveterate. Obſolete.
The conſpiracies, and all of that old
Infeſtered grudge, the which his mother felt,
So ſoon as Clarion he did behold,
His heart with vengeful malice only ſwelt. Spenſer.

INFEUDA'TION. n. ſ. [in and feudum, Latin.] The act of putting one in poſſeſſion of a fee or eſtate.
Another military proviſion was conventional and by tenure, upon the infeudation of the tenant, and was uſually called knight's ſervice. Hale.

INFIDEL. n. ſ. [infidelle, Fr. infidelis, Latin.] An unbeliever; a miſcreant; a pagan; one who rejects chriſtianity.
I adviſing her, if ſhe muſt marry, yet not to join herſelf to an infidel, as in thoſe times ſome widows chriſtian had done, for the advancement of their eſtate in this world. Hooker.

INFIDE'LITY. n. ſ. [infidelité, Fr. infidelitas, Latin.]
1. Want of faith.
The conſideration of the divine omniſcience and infinite wiſdom, and our own ignorance, are great inſtruments of baniſhing the monſters of infidelity. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
2. Diſbelief of chriſtianity.
One would fancy that infidels would be exempt from that ſingle fault, which ſeems to grow out of the imprudent fervours of religion; but ſo it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much fierceneſs and contention, as if the ſafety of mankind depended upon it. Addiſon's Spectator.
3. Treachery; deceit; breach of contract or truſt.
The infidelities on the one part between the two ſexes, and the caprices on the other, the vanities and vexations attending even the moſt refined delights that make up this buſineſs of life render it filly and uncomfortable. Spectator.

INFINITE. adj. [infini, Fr. infinitus, Latin.]
1. Unbounded; boundleſs; unlimited; immenſe; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.

Impoſſible it is, that God ſhould withdraw his preſence from any thing, becauſe the very ſubſtance of God is infinite. Hooker.

What's time, when on eternity we think?
A thouſand ages in that ſea muſt ſink:
Time's nothing but a word; a million
Is full as far from infinite as one. Denham.

Thou ſov'reign pow'r, whoſe ſecret will controuls
The inward bent and motion of our ſouls!
Why haſt thou plac'd ſuch infinite degrees
Between the cauſe and cure of my diſeaſe? Prior.

When we would think of infinite ſpace or duration, we at firſt make ſome very large idea; as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which poſſibly we multiply ſeveral times. Locke.

Even an angel's comprehenſive thought
Cannot extend as far as thou haſt wrought:
Our vaſt conceptions are by ſwelling brought,
Swallow'd and loſt in infinite, to nought. Dennis.

2. It is hyperbolically uſed for large; great.

INFI'NITELY. adv. [from infinite.]

1. Without limits; without bounds; immenſely.

Nothing may be infinitely deſired, but that good which indeed is infinite. Hooker.

2. In a great degree.

This is Antonio,
To whom I am to infinitely bound. Shakſpeare.

The king ſaw that contrariwiſe it would follow, that England, though much leſs in territory, yet ſhould have infinitely more ſoldiers of their native forces than thoſe other nations have. Bacon's Henry VII.

Infinitely the greater part of mankind have profeſſed to act under a full perſuaſion of this great article. Rogers.

INFI'NITENESS. n. ſ. [from infinite.] Immenſity; boundleſneſs; infinity.

The cunning of his flattery, the readineſs of his tears, the infiniteneſs of his vows, were but among the weakeſt threads of his net. Sidney.

Let us always bear about us ſuch impreſſions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourſelves before his Almightineſs, and expreſs that infinite diſtance between his infiniteneſs and our weakneſſes. Taylor.

INFINITE'SIMAL. adj. [from infinite.] Infinitely divided.

INFI'NITIVE. adj. [infinitif, Fr. infinitivus, Latin.] In grammar, the infinitive affirms or intimates the intention of affirming, which is one uſe of the indicative; but then it does not do it abſolutely. Clarke.

INFI'NITUDE. n. ſ. [from infinite.]

1. Infinity; immenſity.

Confuſion heard his voice, and wild uproar
Stood rul'd, ſtood vaſt infinitude confin'd. Milton.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompetible to continued or ſucceſſive motion, or continued quantity, and pends upon the incompoſſibility of the very nature of things ſucceſſive or extenſive with infinitude; yet that incompoſſibility is more conſpicuous in diſcrete quantity, that ariſeth from parts actually diſtinguiſhed. Hale.

2. Boundleſs number.

We ſee all the good ſenſe of the age cut out, and minced into almoſt an infinitude of diſtinctions. Addiſon's Spectator.

INFI'NITY. n. ſ. [infinité, French; infinitas, Latin.]

1. Immenſity; boundleſneſs; unlimited qualities.

There cannot be more infinities than one; for one of them would limit the other. Raleigh.

The better, the more deſirable; that therefore muſt be deſirable, wherein there is infinity of goodneſs; ſo that if any thing deſirable may be infinite, that muſt needs be the higheſt of all things that are deſired: no good is infinite but only God, therefore he is our felicity and bliſs. Hooker.

2. Endleſs number. A hyperbolical uſe of the word.

Homer has concealed faults under an infinity of admirable beauties. Broome.

The liver, being ſwelled, compreſſeth the ſtomach, ſtops the circulation of the juices, and produceth an infinity of bad ſymptoms. Arbuth.

INFI'RM. adj. [infirme, Fr. infirmus, Lat.]

1. Weak; feeble; diſabled of body.

Here ſtand I your brave;
A poor, infirm, weak, and deſpis'd old man. Shakſpeare.

2. Weak of mind; irreſolute.

I am afraid to think what I have done:
Look on't again, I dare not.
—— Infirm of purpoſe;
Give me the dagger Shakſp. Macbeth.

That on my head all might be viſited,
Thy frailty, and infirmer ſex, forgiv'n;
To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milton.

3. Not ſtable; not ſolid.

He who fixes upon falſe principles, treads upon infirm ground, and ſo ſinks; and he who fails in his deductions from right principles, ſtumbles upon firm ground, and falls. South.

To INFI'RM. v. a. [infirmer, Fr. infirmo, Latin.] To weaken; to ſhake; to enfeeble. Not in uſe.

Some contrary ſpirits will object this as a ſufficient reaſon to infirm all thoſe points. Raleigh's Eſſays.

The ſpleen is unjuſtly introduced to invigorate the ſiniſter ſide, which, being dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate it. Brown.

INFI'RMARY. n. ſ. [infirmerie, French.] Lodgings for the ſick.

Theſe buildings to be for privy lodgings on both ſides, and the end for privy galleries, whereof one ſhould be for an infirmary, if any ſpecial perſon ſhould be ſick. Bacon.

Infirmity,
Which waits upon worn times, hath ſomething ſeiz'd
His wiſh'd ability. Shakſp. Winter's Tale.

Diſcover thine infirmity,
That warranteth by law to be thy privilege:
I am with child, ye bloody homicides. Shakſp.

If he had done or ſaid any thing amiſs, he deſired their worſhips to think it was his infirmities. Shakſpeare's Julius Cæſar.

Are the infirmities of the body, pains, and diſeaſes his complaints? His faith reminds him of the day when this corruptible ſhall put on incorruption, and this mortal immortality. Rogers.

2. Failing; weakneſs; fault.

A friend ſhould bear a friend's infirmities;
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are. Shakſpeare.

Many infirmities made it appear more requiſite, that a wiſer man ſhould have the application of his intereſt. Clarendon.

How difficult is it to preſerve a great name, when he that has acquired it, is ſo obnoxious to ſuch little weakneſſes and infirmities, as are no ſmall diminution to it. Addiſon.

3. Diſeaſe; malady.

General laws are like general rules of phyſick, according whereunto, as now, no wiſe man will deſire himſelf to be cured, if there be joined with his diſeaſe ſome ſpecial accident, in regard that thereby others in the ſame infirmity, but without the like accident, may. Hooker.

Sometimes [illegible] may be deprived by the [illegible] Temple.

To kindle Mars with military ſounds,
Nor wanted horns t'inſpire ſagacious hounds. Dryden.

FLA'TION. n. ſ. [inflatio, Latin; from inflate.] The ſtate of being ſwelled with wind; flatulence.
Wind coming upwards, inflations and tumours of the belly, are ſigns of a phlegmatick conſtitution. Arbuthnot on Diet.

INFLECT. v. a. [inflecto, Latin.]
To bend; to turn.
What makes them this one way their race direct,
While they a thouſand other ways reject?
Why do they never once their courſe inflect? Blackmore
Do not the rays of light which fall upon bodies, begin to bend before they arrive at the bodies? And are they not reflected, refracted, and inflected by one and the ſame principle, acting variouſly in various circumſtances? Newton's Opticks.

To vary a noun or verb in its terminations.

NFLE'CTION. n. ſ. [inflectio, Latin.]

1. The act of bending or turning.
Neither the divine determinations, perſuaſions, or inflections of the underſtanding or will of rational creatures, doth deceive the underſtanding, pervert the will, or neceſſitate either to any moral evil. Hale.

2. Modulation of the voice.
His virtue, his geſture, his countenance, his zeal, the motion of his body, and the inflection of his voice, who firſt uttereth them as his own, is that which giveth the very eſſence of inſtruments available to eternal life. Hooker.

3. Variation of a noun or verb.
The ſame word in the original tongue, by divers inflections and variations, makes divers dialects. Brerewood

INFLE'CTIVE. adj. [from inflect.] Having the power of bending.

3. Not to be changed or altered.
The nature of things is inflexible, and their natural relations unalterable: we muſt bring our underſtandings to things, and not bend things to our fancies. Watts

INFLE'XIBLY. adv. [from inflexible.] Inexorably; invariably; without relaxation or remiſſion.
It ſhould be begun early, and inflexibly kept to, 'till there appears not the leaſt reluctancy. Locke.

To INFLI'CT. v. a. [infligo, inflictus, Lat. infliger, Fr.] To put in act or impoſe as a puniſhment.
I know no pain, they can inflict upon him,
Will make him ſay I mov'd him to thoſe arms. Shakſpeare
Sufficient is this puniſhment which was inflicted. 2 Cor.
What the potent victor in his rage
Can elſe inflict. Milton.
What heart could wiſh, what hand inflict this dire diſgrace? Dryden's Æneid.
By luxury we condemn ourſelves to greater torments than have been yet invented by anger or revenge, or inflicted by the greateſt tyrants upon the worſt of men. Temple.

INFLI'CTER. n. ſ. [from inflict.] He who puniſhes.
Revenge is commonly not bounded, but extended to the utmoſt power of the inflicter. Government of the Tongue.

INFLI'CTION. n. ſ. [from inflict.]

1. The act of uſing puniſhments.
So our decrees,
Dead to infliction, to themſelves are dead;
And liberty plucks juſtice by the noſe. Shakſp.
Sin ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but alſo as to actual infliction. South.

2. The puniſhment impoſed.
What but thy malice, mov'd thee to miſdeem
Of righteous Job, than cruelly to afflict him
With all inflictions? But his patience won. Milton.

And in thick shelter of innumerous boughs,
Enjoy the comfort gentle sleep allows. Pope.

To INO'CULATE. v. n. [inoculo, in and oculus, Lat.] To propagate any plant by inserting its bud into another stock; to practise inoculation. See INOCULATION.

Nor are the ways alike in all
How to ingraff, how to inoculate. May's Virgil.

Now is the season for the budding of the orange-tree, inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month. Evelyn.

But various are the ways to change the stock,
To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate. Dryden.

To INO'CULATE. v. a. To yield a bud to another stock.

Virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Thy stock is too much out of date,
For tender plants t' inoculate. Cleaveland

Where lilies, in a lovely brown,

INOCULA'TION. n. f. [inoculatio, Latin; from inoculate.]

1. The act of inserting the eye of a bud into another stock.

Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stone fruit, and upon oranges and jasmines. Chuse a smooth part of the stock, then with your knife make an horizontal cut cross the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock. then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the foot-stalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it. This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all these buds which lose their eyes in stripping are good for nothing. then raising the bark of the stock, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock; and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud. Miller.

In the stem of Elaiana they all met, and came to be ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by inoculation. Howel.

2. The practice of transplanting the smallpox, by infusion of the matter from ripened pustules into the veins of the uninfected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than what frequently comes by infection. Quincy.

It is evident, by inoculation, that the smallest quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produceth the disease. Arbuthnot.

INOCULA'TOR. n. f. [from inoculate.]

1. One that practises the inoculation of trees.

2. One who propagates the smallpox by inoculation.

Had John a Gaddesden been now living, he would have been at the head of the inoculators. Friend's History of Physick.

To make ground fertile, aſhes excel; inſomuch as the countries about Ætna have amends made them, for the miſchiefs the eruptions do. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Simonides was an excellent poet, inſomuch that he made his fortune by it. L'Eſtrange

They made the ground uneven about their neſt, inſomuch that the ſtate did not lie flat upon it, but left a free paſſage underneath. Addiſon

To INSPE'CT. v. a. [inſpicio, inſpectum, Latin.] To look into by way of examination.

INSPE'CTION. n. f. [inſpection, Fr. inſpectio, Latin.]

1. Prying examination; narrow and cloſe ſurvey.

With narrow ſearch, and with inſpection deep,
Conſider every creature. Milton.

Our religion is a religion that dares to be underſtood; that preſs itſelf to the ſearch of the inquiſitive, to the inſpection of the ſevereſt and the moſt awakened reaſon; for, being ſecure of her ſubſtantial truth and purity, ſhe knows that for her to be ſeen and looked into, is to be embraced and admired, as there needs no greater argument for men to love the light than to ſee it. South.

2. Superintendence; preſiding care. In the firſt ſenſe it ſhould have into before the object, and in the ſecond ſenſe may admit over; but authors confound them.

We may ſafely conceal our good deeds, when they run no hazard of being diverted to improper ends, for want of our own inſpection. Atterbury.

We ſhould apply ourſelves to ſtudy the perfections of God, and to procure lively and vigorous impreſſions of his perpetual preſence with us, and inſpection over us. Atterbury.

The divine inſpection into the affairs of the world, doth neceſſarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth implicitly deny his exiſtence. Bentley.

INSPE'CTOR. n. f. [Latin.]

Ophelia, do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,
Not of that die which their investments shew.
Shakspeare.
You, my lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintained,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove, and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war?
Shakspeare

The true profession of christianity inviolably engages all its followers to do good to all men Spratt.

INVI'OLATE. adj. [inviolate, French; inviolatus, Latin.] Unhurt; unimpaired; unprofaned; unpolluted; unbroken.
His fortune of arms was full inviolate. Bacon.
But let inviolate truth be always dear
To thee, even before friendship, truth prefer Denham.
If the past
Can hope a pardon, by those mutual bonds
Nature has seal'd between us, which, though I
Have cancell'd, thou hast still preserv'd inviolate
I beg thy pardon. Denham's Sophy
My love you claim inviolate secures,
'Tis writ in fate, I can be only yours. Dryden.
In all the changes of his doubtful state,
His truth, like heav'n's, was kept inviolate Dryden.

I'NVIOUS. adj. [invius, Latin.] Impassable; untrodden.
If nothing can oppugn his love,
And virtue invious ways can prove,
What may not he confide to do,
That brings both love and virtue too? Huddibras.

To INVI'SCATE. v. a. [in and viscus, Lat.] To lime; to entangle in glutinous matter.

Spenſer.
There ſhall theſe pairs of faithful lovers be Wedded, with Theſeus, all in jollity. Shakſ
The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar,
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feaſt and dance. Milton.
Good men are never ſo ſurpriſed as in the midſt of their jollities, nor ſo fatally overtaken and caught as when the table is made the ſnare.
South.
With branches we the ſtanes adorn, and waſte
In jollity the day ordain'd to be the laſt. Dryden
My heart was filled with melancholy to ſee ſeveral dropping in the midſt of mirth and jollity
Addiſon's Spectator.

JO'LLY. adj. [joli, Fr. jovialis, Lat.]

To JO'STLE. v. a. [jouſter, French.] To juſtle; to ruſh againſt.

JOT. n. f. [ἰῶτα.] A point; a tittle; the leaſt quantity aſſignable.

As ſuperfluous fleſh did rot,
Amendment ready ſtill at hand did wait,
To pluck it out with pincers fiery hot,
That ſoon in him was left no one corrupt jot.
Fairy Queen.

Go, Elos, tend his treaſure after, do it,
Detain no jot, I charge thee. Shakſpeare.

Let me not ſtay a jot from dinner; go, get it ready. Shakſpeare.

This not hurts him nor profits you a jot;
Forbear it therefore, give your cauſe to Heav'n.
Shakſpeare.

This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expreſsly are a pound of fleſh. Shakſ.

I argue not
Againſt Heav'n's hand, or will; nor bate one jot
Of heart or hope; but ſtill bear up and ſteer
Right onwards. Milton.

You might, with every jot as much juſtice, hang me up, becauſe I'm old, as hert me becauſe I'm impotent. L'Eſtrange.

A man may read the diſcourſes of a very rational author, and yet acquire not one jot of knowledge. Locke.

The final event will not be one jot leſs the conſequence of our own choice and actions, for God's having from all eternity foreſeen and determined what that event ſhall be. Rogers.

JOVIAL. adj. [jovial, Fr. jovialis, Lat.]

2. Travel by land: diſtinguiſhed from a voyage or travel by ſea.

So are the horſes of the enemy,
In general journey bated and brought low. Shakſ.

Before the light of the goſpel, mankind travelled like people in the dark, without any certain proſpect of the end of their journey, or of the way that led to it. Rogers.

He for the promis'd journey bids prepare
The ſmooth han'd horſes and the rapid car. Pope.

3. Paſſage from place to place.

Some, having a long journey from the upper regions, would ſtout up and down a good while.
Burnet's Theory.

Light of the world, the ruler of the year,
Still as thou do'ſt thy radiant journies run
Through every diſtant climate own,
That in fair Albion thou haſt ſeen
The greateſt prince, the brighteſt queen. Prior.

To JO'URNEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To travel; to paſs from place to place.

Gentlemen of good eſteem
Are journeying to ſalute the emperor. Shakſpeare.

We are journeying unto the place, of which the Lord ſaid, I will give it you. Numbers.

Since ſuch love's natural ſtation is, may ſtill
My love deſcend, and journey down the hill,
Not panting after growing beauties, ſo
I ſhall ebb on with them who homeward go.
Donne.

I have journeyed this morning, and it is now the heat of the day, therefore your lordſhip's diſcourſes had need content my ears very well, to make them intreat my eyes to keep open.
Bacon.

Over the tent a cloud
Shall reſt by day, a fiery gleam by night,
Save when they journey. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Having heated his body by journeying, he took cold upon the ground. Wiſeman's Surgery.

JO'URNEYMAN. n. ſ. [journée, a day's work, Fr. and man.] A hired workman; a workman hired by the day.

They were called journeymen that wrought with others by the day, though now by ſtatute to be extended to thoſe likewiſe that covenant to work in their occupation with another by the year.
Cowell.

Players have ſo ſtrutted and bellowed, that I have thought ſome of nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well. Shakſpeare.

I intend to work for the court myſelf, and will have journeymen under me to furniſh the reſt of the nation. Addiſon.

Says Frog to Bull, this old rogue will take the buſineſs into his hands: we muſt ſtarve or turn journeymen to old Lewis baboon. Arbuthnot.

JO'URNEYWORK. n. ſ. [journée, French, and work.] Work performed for hire; work done by the day.

Did no commodities fit, where he Might cut out journeywork for thee?
And ſet thee a talk with ſubornation,
To ſtitch up tale and tequefication? Hudibras.

Her family ſhe was forced to hire out at journeywork to her next neighbours. Arbuthnot.

JO'UST. n. ſ. [joſt, Fr.] Tilt; tournament; mock fight. It is now written leſs properly juſt.

All who ſince
Jouſted in Aſpramont or Montalban. Milton.

JO'WLER. n. ſ. [perhaps corrupted from howler, as making a hideous noiſe after the game, whom the reſt of the pack follow as their leader.] The name of a hunting dog or beagle.

See him drag his feeble legs about,
Like hounds ill coupled jowler lugs him ſtill
Through hedges, ditches, and through all this ill.
Dryden.

JO'WTER. n. ſ. [perhaps corrupted from jolter.]

Plenty of fiſh is vented to the fiſh-drivers, whom we call jowters. Carew.

JOY. n. ſ. [joye, Fr. giogia, Italian.]

1. The paſſion produced by any happy accident; gladneſs; exultation.

Joy is a delight of the mind, from the conſideration of the preſent, or aſſured approaching poſſeſſion of a good. Locke.

There appears much joy in him; even ſo much, that joy could not ſhew itſelf modeſt enough without a badge of bitterneſs. Shakſpeare.

There ſhould not be ſuch heavineſs in their deſtruction, as ſhall be joy over them that are perſuaded to ſalvation. 2 Eſdras.

The lightſome paſſion of joy was not that trivial, vaniſhing, ſuperficial thing, that only gilds the apprehenſion, and plays upon the ſurface of the ſoul. South.

2. Gayety; merriment; feſtivity.

The roots with joy reſound;
And hymen, to hymen, rung around. Dryden.

3. Happineſs; felicity.

My lord Baſſanio, and my gentle lady,
I wiſh you all the joy that you can wiſh. Shakſp.

Come love and health to all;
Then I'll ſit down: give me ſome wine:
I drink to the general joy of the whole table.
Shakſpeare.

Almeyda ſmiling came,
Attended with a train of all her race,
Whom in the rage of empire I had murder'd;
But now, no longer foes, they gave me joy
Of my new conqueſt. Dryden's Don Sebaſtian.

The bride,
Lovely herſelf, and lovely by her ſide,
A bevy of bright nymphs, with ſober grace,
Came glitt'ring like a ſtar, and took her place:
Her heav'nly form beheld, all wiſh'd her joy;
And little wanted, but in vain, their wiſhes all employ. Dryden.

4. A term of fondneſs.

Now our joy,
Although our laſt, yet not our leaſt young love,
What ſay you? Shakſpeare's King Lear.

To JOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To rejoice; to be glad; to exult.

Sometimes I joy, when glad occaſion fits,
And mask in maſh like to a comedy;
Soon after, when my joy to ſorrow flits,
I will make my woes a tragedy. Spenſer.

I cannot joy, until I be reſolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become. Shakſp.

He will joy over thee with ſinging. Zeph.

I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my ſalvation. Hab.

Exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his spirit was refreshed by you. 2 Cor.

They laugh, we weep; they joy while we lament. Fairfax.

No man imparteth his joys to his friend, but he joyeth the more, and no man imparteth his griefs, but he grieveth the less. Bacon's Essays.

Well then, my soul, joy in the midst of pain;
Thy Chief the conquer'd hell, thall from above
With greater triumph yet return again,
And conquer his own justice with his love.
Wotton

Joy thou,
In what he gives to thee this paradise,
And thy fair Eve Milton's Paradise Lost.

Their cheerful age with honour youth attends,
Joy'd that from pleasure's slav'ry they are free
Denham.

To JOY. v. a.

1. To congratulate; to entertain kindly.
Like us they love or hate, like us they know
To joy the friend, or grapple with the foe. Prior.

2. To gladden, to exhilarate.
She went to Pamela, meaning to delight her eyes, and joy her thoughts with the converfation of her beloved fitter. Sidney.

My soul was joy'd in vain,
For angry Neptune rouz'd the raging main. Pope.

3. [jouir de, French.] To enjoy; to have happy poffeffion of.
Let us hence,
And let her joy her raven colour'd love. Shakfp.

I might have liv'd, and joy'd immortal bliss,
Yet willingly chofe rather death with thee.
Milton.

Th' ufurper joy'd not long
His ill-got crown. Dryden's Spanish Friar

JO'YANCE. n. f. [joyant, old French.] Gayety; fiftivity. Obfolete.
Bring home with you the glory of her gain;
With joyance bring her, and with jollity. Spenfer.

There him refts in riotous fuffifance,
Of all his gladfu'nefs and kingly joyance. Spenfer.

JO'YFUL. adj. [joy and full.]
1. Full of joy; glad; exulting.
They bleffed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings.

My foul fhall be joyful in my God. Ifaiah.

2. Sometimes it has of before the cauſe of joy.
Six brave companions from each fhip we loft:
With fails outfpread we fly th' unequal fight,
Sad for their lofs, but joyful of our life. Pope.

JO'YFULLY. adv. [from joyful.] With joy; gladly.
If we no more meet till we meet in heav'n,
Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,
And my kind kinfmen, warriours all, adieu.
Shakfpeare.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or fooner underftood the fign to flie:
With fuch alacrity they bore away,
As if to praife them all the ſtates ſtood by. Dryd.

The good chriſtian conſiders pains only as neceſſary paſſages to a glorious immortality; that, through this dark ſcene of fancied horror, ſees a crown and a throne, and everlaſting bleſſings prepared for him, joyfully receives his ſummons, as he has long impatiently expected it. Wake.

JO'YFULNESS. n. f. [from joyful.] Gladneſs; joy.
Thou ſerveſt not the Lord thy God with joyfulneſs, and with gladneſs of heart, for the abundance of all things. Deut.

JO'YLESS. adj. [from joy.]
1. Void of joy; feeling no pleaſure.
A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am ſhe, and altogether joyleſs. Shakſpeare.

With downcaſt eyes the joyleſs victor ſat,
Revolving in his alter'd ſoul
The various turns of chance below:
And now and then a ſigh he ſtole,
And tears began to flow. Dryden's Alex. Feaſt.

2. It has ſometimes of before the object.
With two fair eyes his miſtreſs burns his breaſt,
He looks and languiſhes, and leaves his reſt,
Forſakes his food, and, pining for the laſs,
Is joyleſs of the grove, and ſpurns the growing graſs. Dryden.

3. Giving no pleaſure.
A joyleſs, dismal, black, and ſorrowful iſſue
Here is a babe, as loathſome as a toad. Shakſp.

Here love his golden ſhafts employs; here lights
His conſtant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here, and revels: not in the bought ſmiles
Of harlots, lovelefs, joyleſs, unendear'd,
Caſual fruition. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

The pure in heart ſhall ſee God; and if any others could ſo invade this their incloſure, as to take heaven by violence, it ſurely would be a very joyleſs poſſeſſion Decay of Piety.

He forgets his ſleep, and loaths his food,
That youth, and health, and war are joyleſs to him.
Addiſon.

JO'YOUS. adj. [joyeux, French.]
1. Glad; gay; merry.
Moſt joyous man, on whom the ſhining ſun
Did ſhew his face, myſelf I did eſteem,
And that my taller friend did no leſs joyous deem.
Fairy Queen.

Joyous the birds: freſh gales and gentle airs
Whiſper'd it. Milton.

Then joyous birds frequent the lovely grove,
And beaſts, by nature ſtung, renew their love.
Dryden.

Paſt by her flow'ry bank the ſons of Arcas,
Fav'rites of heav'n, with happy care protect
Their fleecy charge, and joyous drink her wave
Prior.

2. Giving joy.
They all as glad as birds of joyous prime,
Thence led her forth, about her dancing round.
Fairy Queen.

3. It has of ſometimes before the cauſe of joy.
Round our death-bed ev'ry friend ſhould run,
And joyous of our conqueſt early won;
While the malicious world with envious tears
Should grudge our happy end, and wiſh it theirs.
Dryden.

IPECACUA'NHA. n. f. An Indian plant.
Ipecacuanha is a ſmall irregularly contorted root, rough, denſe, and firm. One ſort is of a duſky greyiſh colour on the ſurface, and of a paler grey when broken, brought from Peru: the other ſort is a ſmaller root, reſembling the former; but it is of a deep duſky brown on the outſide, and white when broken, brought from the Braſils. The grey ought to be preferred, becauſe the brown is apt to operate more roughly.
Hill's Mat. Med.

IRA'SCIBLE. adj. [iraſcibilis, low Latin; iraſcible, Fr.] Partaking of the nature of anger.
The iraſcible paſſions follow the temper of the heart, and the concupiſcible diſtractions on the crafis of the liver. Brown.

I know more than one inſtance of iraſcible paſſions ſubdued by a vegetable diet. Arbuthnot.

We are here in the country ſurrounded with bleſſings and pleaſures, without any occaſion of exerciſing our iraſcible faculties. Digby to Pope.

IRE. n. f. [Fr. ira, Lat.] Anger; rage; paſſionate hatred.
She lik'd not his deſire;
Fain would be free, but dreaded parents ire
Sidney

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not flake mine ire, nor eaſe my heart.
Shakſpeare.

Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that ſo long
Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's ſon. Milton.

The ſentence, from thy head remov'd, may light
On me, ſole cauſe to thee of all this woe;
Me! me! only juſt object of his ire. Milton.

For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts,
And empties all his quiver in our hearts;
Thus will perſiſt, relentleſs in his ire,
Till the fair ſlave be render'd to his ſire. Dryden.

I'RFUL. adj. [ire and full.] Angry; raging; furious.
The irful baſtard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I toon encounter'd. Shakſp.

By many hands your father was ſubdu'd;
But only ſlaughter'd by the irful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakſp. Henry VI.

There learn'd this mind of arms the irful gaſſe.
Fairfax.

In midſt of all the dome miſfortune ſat,
And gloomy diſcontent, and fell debate,
And madneſs laughing in his irful mood. Dryd.

I'RFULLY. adv. [from ire.] With ire; in an angry manner.

IRIS. n. f. [Latin.]
1. The rainbow.
Beſide the ſolary iris, which God ſheweth unto Noah, there is another lunary, whole effects is the moon. Brown.

2. Any appearance of light reſembling the rainbow.
When both bows appeared more diſtinct, I meaſured the breadth of the interior iris, 2 gr. 10′, and the breadth of the red, yellow, and green, in the exterior iris, was to the breadth of the ſame colours in the interior, 3 to 2. Newton's Opt.

3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.
4. The flower-de-luce.
Iris all hues, roſes and jeſſamine. Milton

4. To IRK. v. a. [yrk, Iſlandick.] This word is uſed only impersonally, it irks me; mihi pœne eſt, it gives me pain; or, I am weary of it. Thus the authors of the accidence, ſay tædet, it irketh.

Come, ſhall we go and kill us venſon?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shakſp.

It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd Shak.

I'RKSOME. adj. [from irk.] Wearifome; tedious; troubleſome; toilſome; tireſome; unpleaſing.
I know ſhe is an irkſome brawling ſcold
Shakſpeare.

Since that thou can'ſt talk of love ſo well,
Thy company, which erſt was irkſome to me,
I will endure. Shakſpeare.

Where he may likelieſt find
Truce to his reſtleſs thoughts, and entertain
The irkſome hours till his great chief return
Milton.

For not to irkſome toil, but to delight
He made us, and delight to reaſon join'd.
Milton.

There is nothing ſo irkſome as general diſcourſes, eſpecially when they turn chiefly upon words. Addiſon's Spectator.

Frequent appeals from hence have been very irkſome to that illuſtrious body. Swift.

I'RKSOMELY. adv. [from irkſome.] Wearifomely; tediouſly.

I'RKSOMENESS. n. f. [from irkſome.] Tediouſneſs; wearifomeneſs.

I'RON. n. f. [haiarn, Welſh; ɪpenn, ɪpen, Saxon; iorn, Erſe.]
1. A metal common to all parts of the world. Though the lighteſt of all metals, except tin, it is conſiderably the hardeſt; and, when pure, naturally malleable: when wrought into ſteel, or when in the impure ſtate from its firſt fuſion, it is ſcarce malleable. Moſt of the other metals are brittle while they are hot; but this is moſt malleable as it approaches neareſt to fuſion. The ſpecifick gravity of iron is to water as 7632 is to 1000. It is the only known substance that is attracted by the loadstone. Iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals. Hill.

Nor sirlefs dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakſp.

If he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer. Numbers.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadstone, and to be so drawn is a part of that of iron. Locke.

In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are several thin plates placed parallel to each other. Woodward.

There are incredible quantities of iron slag in various parts of the forest of Dean. Woodward.

Iron stone lies in strata. Woodward.

I treated of making iron work and steel work. Moxon.

1. Any instrument or utensil made of iron: as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing iron. In this sense it has a plural.

Irons of a dout, doublets that hangmen would
Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shakſp.

O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries. Shakſp.

Can'st thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fish-spears? Job.

For this your locks in paper-durance bound?
For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around? Pope.

3. Chain; shackle; manacle: as, he was put in irons.

The iron entered into his soul. Pſalms.

His feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in irons. Pſalms.

I'RON. adj.

1. Made of iron.

In iron walls they deem'd me not secure. Shak.

Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight
Unto my cell. Shakſpeare.

Some are of an iron red, shining and polite; others not polite, but as if powder'd with iron dust. Woodward.

Pole-cats and weesels do a great deal of injury to warrens; the way of taking them is in hutches and iron traps. Mortimer.

2. Resembling iron in colour.

A piece of stone of a dark iron grey colour, but in some parts of a ferruginous colour. Woodw.

Some of them are of an iron red, and very bright. Woodward.

3. Harsh; severe; rigid; miserable; calamitous: as, the iron age, for an age of hardship and wickedness. These ideas may be found more or less in all the following examples.

Three vigorous virgins, waiting still behind
Affist the throne of th' iron sceptre'd king. Crashaw.

O sad virgin, that thy power
Might bid the soul of Orpheus sing,
Such notes as warbled to the string,
Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek,
And made hell grant what love did seek. Milt.

In all my iron years of wars and dangers,
From blooming youth down to decaying age,
My fame ne'er knew a stain of dishonour. Rowe.

Jove crush the nations with an iron rod,
And every monarch be the scourge of God. Pope.

4. Indissoluble; unbroken.

Rash Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immeasureable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep;
Imprudent! him death's iron sleep oppreſt. Philips.

5. Hard; impenetrable.

I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unreſpective boys: none are for me,
That look into me with considerate eyes. Shakſpeare.

He that is of God, heareth God's words John.

Be not afraid of them, for they cannot do evil, neither is it in them to do good. Jer.

My thought, whoſe murther yet is but fantaſticd,
Shakes ſo my ſingle ſtate of man, that function
Is ſmother'd in ſurmiſe; and nothing is,
But what is not. Shakſpeare.

2. It is ſometimes expreſſed by 's.

There 's ſome among you have beheld me fighting. Shakſpeare.

ISCHIA'DICK. adj. [ἰσχιον, ἰσχιαδικος; iſchiadique, Fr.] In anatomy, an epithet to the crural vein; in pathology, the iſchiadick paſſion is the gout in the hip, or the ſciatica.

ISCHURE'TICK. n. ſ. [iſchuretique, French; from iſchury.] Such medicines as force urine when ſuppreſſed.

ISCHURY n. ſ. [ἰσχυρία, ἴσχω and ὄυρον, urine; iſchurie, French; iſchuria, Lat.] A ſtoppage of urine, whether by gravel or other cauſe.

ISH. [ꝟre, Saxon.]

1. A termination added to an adjective to expreſs diminution, a ſmall degree, or incipient ſtate of any quality: as, bliſh, tending to blue; brightiſh, ſomewhat bright.

2. It is likewiſe ſometimes the termination of a gentile or poſſeſſive adjective: as, Swediſh, Daniſh; the Daniſh territories, or territories of the Danes.

3. It likewiſe notes participation of the qualities of the ſubſtantive to which it is added; as fool, fooliſh; man, manniſh; rogue, roguiſh.

I'SICLE. n. ſ. [more properly icicle, from ice; but ice ſhould rather be written iſe; ꝟꝛꝛ, Saxon.] A pendent ſhoot of ice.

Do you know this lady?
——The moon of Rome? chaſte as the iſicle
That's curdled by the froſt from pureſt ſnow
Hanging on Dian's temple. Shakſpeare.

The froſts and ſnows her tender body ſpare;
Thoſe are not limbs for iſicles to tear. Dryden.

ISINGLA'SS. n. ſ. [from ice, or iſe, and glaſs; ichthyocolla, Lat.] A tough, firm, and light ſubſtance, of a whitiſh colour, and in ſome degree tranſparent, much reſembling glue.

The fiſh from which iſinglaſs is prepared, is one of the cartilaginous kind: it grows to eighteen and twenty feet in length, and greatly reſembles the ſturgeon. It is frequent in the Danube, the Boriſthenes, the Volga, and the larger rivers of Europe. From the inteſtines of this fiſh the ſinglaſs is prepared by boiling. Hill.

The cure of putrefaction requires an incraſſating diet, as all uſeful broths, hartſhorn, ivory, and ſinglaſs. Floyer

Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by additions, as ſinglaſs.
Mortimer's Huſbandry.

I'SINGLASS Stone. n. ſ. A foſſil which is one of the pureſt and ſimpleſt of the natural bodies. The maſſes are of a browniſh or reddiſh colour; but when the plates are ſeparated, they are perfectly colourleſs, and more bright and pellucid than the fineſt glaſs. It is found in Muſcovy, Perſia, the iſland of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany. Hill.

I'SLAND. n. ſ. [inſula, Latin; iſola, Italian; ealand, Erſe. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land ſurrounded by water.

He will carry this iſland home in his pocket, and give it his ſon for an apple ——And ſowing the kernels of it in the ſea, bring forth more iſlands. Shakſpeare.

Within a long receſs there lies a bay,
An iſland ſhades it from the rolling ſea,
And forms a port. Dryden.

Iſland of bliſs! amid' the ſubject ſeas Thomſ.

I'SLANDER. n. ſ. [from iſland. Pronounced ilander.] An inhabitant of a country ſurrounded by water.

We, as all iſlanders, are lunares, or the moon's men. Camden.

Your dinner, and the generous iſlanders
By you invited, do attend your preſence. Shakſp.

There are many bitter ſayings againſt iſlanders in general, repreſenting them as fierce, treacherous, and unhoſpitable. thoſe who live on the continent have ſuch frequent intercourſe with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than thoſe who are the inhabitants of an iſland. Addiſon.

A race of rugged mariners are theſe,
Unpoliſh'd men, and boiſt'rous as their ſeas;
The native iſlanders alone their care,
And hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope.

ISLE. n. ſ. [iſle, French; inſula, Latin. Pronounced ile.]

1. An iſland; a country ſurrounded by water.

The inſtalment of this noble duke
In the ſeat royal of this famous iſle. Shakſpeare.

The dreadful fight
Betwixt a nation and two whales I write:
Seas ſtain'd with gore I ſing, advent'rous toil,
And how theſe monſters did diſarm and iſle.
Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for aiſle, from aile, Fr. from ala, Latin, the aiſle being probably at firſt only a wing or ſide walk. It may come likewiſe from allée, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church or publick building.

O'er the twilight groves and duſky caves,
Long founding iſles and intermingled graves,
Black melancholy ſits. Pope.

ISOPERIME'TRICAL. n. ſ. [ἴσος, περὶ, and μέτρον] In geometry, are ſuch figures as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greateſt. Harris.

ISO'SCELES. n. ſ. [iſoſcele, Fr. or equiangular triangle.] That which hath only two ſides equal. Harris.

I'SSUE. n. ſ. [iſſue, French.]

1. The act of paſſing out.

2. Exit; egreſs; paſſage out.

Unto the Lord belong the iſſues from death. Pſalms.

Let us examine what bodies touch a moveable whilſt in motion, as the only means to find an iſſue out of this difficulty. Digby on Bodies.

We might have eaſily prevented thoſe great returns of money to France, and if it be true the French are ſo impoveriſhed, in what condition muſt they have been, if that iſſue of wealth had been ſtopped? Swift.

3. Event; conſequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd
But to fine iſſues. Shakſpeare.

If I were ever fearful
To do a thing, were I the iſſue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Againſt the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft infects the wiſeſt. Shakſpeare

But let the iſſue correſpondent prove
To good beginnings of each enterpize. Fairfax.

If things were caſt upon this iſſue, that God ſhould never prevent ſin 'till man deſerved it, the beſt would ſin, and ſin for ever. South.

The wittieſt ſayings and ſentences will be found the iſſues of chance, and nothing elſe but ſo many lucky hits of a roving fancy. South.

Our preſent condition is better for us in the iſſue, than that uninterrupted health and ſecurity that the atheiſt deſires. Bentley.

4. Termination; concluſion.

He hath preſerv'd Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publickly executed after theſe wars, of which they hope for a ſoon and proſperous iſſue. Sidney

What iſſue of my love remains for me!
How wild a paſſion works within my breaſt!
With what prodigious flames am I poſſeſt!
Dryden.

Homer, at a loſs to bring difficult matters to an iſſue, lays his hero aſleep, and this ſolves the difficulty. Broome.

5. Sequel deduced from premiſes.

I am to pray you not to ſtrain my ſpeech
To groſſer iſſues, nor to larger reach,
Than to ſuſpicion. Shakſpeare's Othello.

6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muſcle for the diſcharge of humours.

This tumour in his left arm was cauſed by ſtrict binding of his iſſue. Wiſeman.

7. Evacuation.

A woman was diſeaſed with an iſſue of blood. Matthew.

8. Progeny; offſpring.

O nation miſerable!
Since that the trueſt iſſue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction ſtands accurſt. Shakſp.
Nor where Abaſſin kings their iſſue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by ſome ſuppos'd
True Paradiſe, under the Æthiop line
By Nilus' head. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.
This old peaceful prince, as Heav'n decreed,
Was bleſs'd with no male iſſue to ſucceed. Dryd.
The frequent productions of monſters, in all the ſpecies of animals, and ſtrange iſſues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not poſſible to conſiſt with this hypotheſis. Locke.

9. In law.

Iſſue hath divers applications in the common law, ſometimes uſed for the children begotten between a man and his wife; ſometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or expences of ſuit; ſometimes for profits of lands or tenements; ſometimes for that point of matter depending in ſuit, whereupon the parties join and put their cauſe to the trial of the jury. Iſſue is either general or ſpecial: general iſſue ſeemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any ſuch thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The ſpecial iſſue then muſt be that, where ſpecial matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and to grow rather to a demurrer, if it be quæſtio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be quæſtio facti. Cowell.

To I'SSUE. v. n. [from the noun; iſſer, French; uſcire, Italian.]

2. To come out; to paſs out of any place.

Waters iſſued out from under the threſhold of the houſe. Ezek.

Ere Pallas iſſu'd from the thunderer's head,

2. To make an irruption; to break out.

Three of maſter Ford's brothers watch the door with piſtols, that none ſhould iſſue out, otherwiſe you might ſlip away. Shakſpeare.
See that none hence iſſue forth a ſpy. Milton
Haſte, arm your Ardeans, iſſue to the plain;
With faith to friend, aſſault the Trojan train.
Dryden.
At length there iſſu'd, from the grove behind,
A fair aſſembly of the female kind. Dryden.
A buzzing noiſe of bees his ears alarms;
Strait iſſue through the ſides aſſembling ſwarms.
Dryden.
Full for the port the Ithacenſians ſtand,
And furl their ſails, and iſſue on the land. Pope.

3. To proceed as an offſpring.

Of thy ſons that ſhall iſſue from thee, which thou ſhalt beget, ſhall they take away. 2 Kings

4. To be produced by any fund.

Theſe altarages iſſued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the prieſthood. Aylife's Parergon.

5. To run out in lines.

Pipes made with a belly towards the lower end, and then iſſuing into a ſtrait concave again. Bacon.

To I'SSUE. v. a.

1. To ſend out; to ſend forth.

A weak degree of heat is not able either to digeſt the parts or to iſſue the ſpirits. Bacon.
The commiſſioners ſhould iſſue money out to no other uſe. Temple.

2. To ſend out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent ſenſe. It is commonly followed by a particle, out or forth.

If the council iſſued out any order againſt them, or if the king ſent a proclamation for their repair to their houſes, ſome noblemen publiſhed a proteſtation. Clarendon.
Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,
A manſion proper for a mourning god:
Here he gives audience, iſſuing out decrees
To rivers, his dependent deities. Dryden.
In vain the maſter iſſues out commands,
In vain the trembling ſailors ply their hands;
The tempeſt unforeſeen prevents their care. Dryd.
They conſtantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive ſuch other commands as the judge ſhall iſſue forth. Aylife's Parergon.

I'SSUELESS. adj. [from iſſue.] Having no offſpring; wanting deſcendants.

Carew, by virtue of this entail, ſucceeded to Hugh's portion, as dying iſſueleſs. Carew.
I have done ſin;
For which the Heav'ns, taking angry note,
Have left me iſſueleſs. Shakſp. Winter's Tale.

I'STHMUS. n. ſ. [iſthmus, Latin.] A neck of land joining the peninſula to the continent.

The Aſſyrian empire ſtretcheth northward to that iſthmus between the Euxine and the Caſpian ſeas. Brerewood on Languages.
O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
Thou weak built iſthmus, that doſt proudly riſe
Up betwixt two eternities,
Yet canſt not wave nor wind ſuſtain;
But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.
Our church of England ſtands as Corinth between two ſeas, and there are ſome buſy in cutting the iſthmus, to let in both at once upon it Stillingfleet.
Cleomenes thinking it more adviſable to fortify, not the iſthmus, but the mountains, put his deſign in execution. Creech.
Plac'd on this iſthmus of a middle ſtate,
A being darkly wiſe, and rudely great. Pope.

IT. pronoun. [hit, Saxon.]

1. The neutral demonſtrative. Uſed in ſpeaking of things. For it, our anceſtors uſed he, as the neutral pronoun; and for its they uſed his. Thus in the Accidence, a noun adjective is that which cannot ſtand by himſelf, but requireth another word to be joined with him to ſhow his ſignification.

Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itſelf. Bramhall againſt Hobbes.
Will our great anger learn to ſtoop ſo low?
I know it cannot. Cowley.
Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
Thou who maſter art of it. Cowley.
His ſon, it may be, dreads no harm;
But kindly waits his father's coming home.
Flatman.
The time will come, it will, when you ſhall know
The rage of love. Dryden.
How can I ſpeak? or how, ſir, can you hear?
Imagine that which you would moſt deplore,
And that which I would ſpeak, is it or more.
Dryden.
A mind ſo furniſhed, what reaſon has it to acquieſce in its concluſions? Locke.
The glory which encompaſſed them covered the place, and darted its rays with ſo much ſtrength, that the whole fabrick began to melt.
Addiſon's Freeholder.
If we find a greater good in the preſent conſtitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and ſtructures, we may then reaſonably conclude, that the preſent conſtitution proceeded from an intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley
The deſign, it ſeems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry. Swift

2. It is uſed abſolutely for the ſtate of a perſon or affair.

How is it with our general?
——Even ſo
As with a man by his own alms impoiſon'd,
And with his charity ſlain. Shakſpeare.

3. It is uſed for the thing; the matter; the affair.

It's come to paſs,
That tractable obedience is a ſlave.
To each incenſed will. Shakſpeare's Henry VIII.

4. It is ſometimes expreſſed by 't.

He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching toe by nearer foot,
He lifted with ſuch might and ſtrength,
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length.
Hudibras.

5. It is uſed ludicrouſly after neutral verbs, to give an emphaſis.

If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleaſure Raleigh.
The Lacedemonians, at the ſtraights of Thermopylæ, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.
I have often ſeen people laviſh it profuſely in tricking up their children, and yet ſtarve their minds. Locke.
The mole courſes it not on the ground, like the rat or mouſe, but lives under the earth. Spect.
Whether the charmer ſinner it, or ſaint it,
If folly grows romantick, I muſt paint it. Pope.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicrouſly, or rudely to perſons.

Let us alone him,
Whole care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerleſs kinſman. Shakſpeare's Macbeth.
Do, child, go to it grandam, child:
Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him. Shakſpeare's King John.

7. It is ſometimes uſed of the firſt or ſecond perſon, ſometimes of more. This mode of ſpeech, though uſed by good authors, and ſupported by the il y a of the French, has yet an appearance of barbariſm.

Who was 't came by?
—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word
Macduff is fled to England. Shakſ. Macbeth.
Cay,
'Tis I, that made thy widows Shakſp. Coriol.
'Tis theſe that early taint the female ſoul,
Pope.

He had full pedigree in his head, and an itch of being thought a divine king Dryden
From ſervants company a child is to be kept, not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Locke
At laſt mankind when generous Manly raſes,
All know 'tis virtue, to be thanks them knaves,
When univerſal homage their pays,
All ſee 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praiſe. Pope.

To ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel that uneaſineſs in the ſkin which is removed by rubbing.

A troubleſome iteching of the part was occaſioned by want of tranſpiration. Wiſeman.

2. To long; to have continual deſire. This ſenſe appears in the following examples, though ſome of them are equivocal.

There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by peers or jury. He tried by others, be it a civil or criminal, publick or private, peculiar or real, is ſeated in the boſom juris, and as they find it, ſo is the judgment. This jury takes not only in crimes or injuries recent, but also in all other civil and matters of office, as if the queſtion make mention of any thing touching the crown, or doth it by a jury of inquiſition of the county or hundred, be it of treaſon, dead or living, or whether the eldeſt or youngeſt ſiſter, quarter to come, the ſhrieve in his county conducts the full body of a hundred, the ſworn men of a court leet or court baron, if they in view of any offence, or default any one be preſently put to, they do it by the ſame manner: to this which it is ſaid, that it is done by parliament, by battle, or by other, in this place, is taken for a jury or inqueſt, empanelled upon any cauſe in a court where this kind of trial is uſed. This jury, though it appertain to moſt courts of the common law, yet it is moſt notorious in the half year courts of the juſtices ſervants, commonly called the great aſſizes, and in the quarter ſeſſions, and in them it is moſt ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil cauſes, whereas in other courts it is often termed an inqueſt. In the greater ſeſſions there are uſually many juries, becauſe there be more of cauſes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the reſt petit juries. The grand jury conſiſts ordinarily of twenty-four grave and ſubſtantial gentlemen, or ſome of them yeomen, choſen indifferently out of the whole ſhire by the ſheriff, to conſider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either approve by writing upon them theſe words, billa vera, or diſallow by writing ignoramus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be conſidered of, becauſe the cauſe is of ſuch importance, but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverſe the indictment, or challenge it for inſufficiency, or remove the cauſe to a higher court by certiorari, in which two former caſes it is referred to another jury, and in the latter tranſmitted to the higher. Thoſe that paſs upon civil cauſes reſt, are all or ſo many as can conveniently be had, of the ſame hundred where the land or tenements in queſtion do lie, and four at the leaſt; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant: according unto which, judgment paſſeth afterward in the court where the cauſe firſt began, and the reaſon hereof is, becauſe theſe juſtices before ſpecified are, in this caſe, for the eaſe of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called niſi prius, and to return it to the court where the cauſe is depending. Cowell

The jury, paſſing on the priſoner's life,
May in the ſworn twelve have a thief or two
Guiltier than him they try. Shakſpeare.

How innocent I was,
His noble jury and foul cauſe can witneſs. Shak.

Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury that had palpably taken bribes of money before they gave up their verdict. Bacon.

JU'RYMAN. n. ſ. [jury and man.] One who is impannelled on a jury.

The bribery judge ſoon the ſentence ſign
And wretches hang that jurymen may dine. Pope.

No judge was known, upon or off the bench, to uſe the leaſt intimation, that might affect the intereſts of any one ſingle juryman, much leſs of a whole jury. Swift.

JU'RYMAST n. ſ. It ſeems to be properly durée m ſt, maſt de durée, a maſt made to l ſt for the preſent occaſion So the ſeamen call whatever they ſet up in the room of a maſt loſt in a fight or by a ſtorm; being ſome great yard which they put down into the ſtep of that loſt maſt, fattening it into the partners, and fitting to it the miſen or ſome leſſer yard with ſails and ropes, and with it make a ſhift to ſail. Harris.

JUST. adj. [juſte, Fr. juſtus, Lat.]

1. Upright; incorrupt; equitable in the diſtribution of juſtice.
   Take it, while yet 'tis praiſe, before my race
   Unfaſely juſt, break looſe on this bad age Dryd.
   Men are commonly ſo juſt to virtue and goodneſs, as to praiſe it in others, even when they do not practiſe it themſelves. Tillotſon.
2. Honeſt; without crime in dealing with others.
   Juſt balances, juſt weights, and a juſt ephah. Leviticus.
3. I know not whether juſt of has any other authority.
   Juſt of thy word, in ev'ry thought ſincere,
   Who knew no wiſh but what the world might hear. Pope.
4. Exact; proper; accurate.
   Boileau's numbers are excellent, his expreſſions noble, his thoughts juſt, his language pure, and his ſtyle cloſe. Dryden.
   Theſe ſcenes were wrought,
   Embelliſh'd with good morals and juſt thought Granville.
   Juſt precepts thus from great examples giv'n,
   She drew from them what they deriv'd from Heav'n. Pope.
   Juſt to the tale, as preſent at the fray,
   Or taught the labours of the dreadful way. Pope
   Once on a time La Mancha's knight, they ſay,
   A certain bard encount'ring on the way,
   Diſcours'd in terms as juſt, with looks as ſage,
   As ere could Dennis of the laws o' th' ſtage. Pope
   Though the ſyllogiſm be irregular, yet the inferences are juſt and true. Watts' Logick.
5. Virtuous; innocent; pure.
   How ſhould man be juſt with God? Job
   A juſt man falleth ſeven times and riſeth. Proverbs.

   The juſt th' unjuſt to ſerve. Milton
6. True; not forged.
   Crimes were laid to his charge too many, the leaſt whereof being juſt, had bereaved him of eſtimation and credit. Hooker.
7. Grounded on principles of juſtice; rightful.
   Me though juſt right
   Did firſt create your leader. Milton.
8. Equally retributed.
   He received a juſt recompence of reward. Hebr.
   Whole damnation is juſt Romans.
   As Heſiod ſings, ſpread water o'er thy fields,
   And a moſt juſt and glad increaſe it yields, Denham.
9. Complete without ſuperfluity or defect.
   He was a comely perſonage, a little above juſt ſtature, well and ſtrait limbed, but ſlender. Bacon.
10. Regular; orderly.
    When all
    The war ſhall ſtand ranged in its juſt array,
    And dreadful pomp, then will I think on thee. Addiſon.
11. Exactly proportioned.
    The prince is here at hand: pleaſeth your lordſhip
    To meet his grace, juſt diſtance 'tween our armies? Shakſpeare.
12. Full; of full dimenſions.
    His ſoldiers had ſkirmiſhes with the Numidians, ſo that often the ſkirmiſh was like to have come to a juſt battle. Knolles
    There is not any one particular above mentioned, but would take up the buſineſs of a juſt volume. Hale.
    There ſeldom appeared a juſt army in the civil wars. Dutcheſs of Newcaſtle.

JUST. adv.

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.
   The god Pan guided my hand juſt to the heart of the beaſt. Sidney.
   They go about to make us believe that they are juſt of the ſame opinion, and that they only think ſuch ceremonies are not to be uſed when they are unprofitable, or when as good or better may be eſtabliſhed. Hooker.
   There, ev'n juſt there he ſtood; and as he ſpoke,
   Where laſt the ſpectre was, ſhe caſt her look. Dryden.
   A few underſtand him right; juſt as when our Saviour ſaid, in an allegorical ſenſe, Except ye eat the fleſh of the ſon of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Bentley.
   'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
   Go juſt alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.
2. Merely; barely.
   It is the humour of weak and trifling men to value themſelves upon juſt nothing at all. L'Eſtrange.
   The Nereids ſwam before
   To ſmooth the ſeas; a ſoft eteſian gale
   But juſt inſpir'd and gently ſwell'd the ſail. Dryden.
   Give me, ye gods, the product of one field,
   That ſo I neither may be rich nor poor;
   And having juſt enough, not covet more. Dryd.
3. Nearly; almoſt; tantum non.
   Being ſpent with age, and juſt at the point of death, Democritus called for loaves of new bread to be brought, and with the ſteam of them under his noſe prolonged his life. Temple.

JUST. n. ſ. [jouſte, French.] Mock encounter on horſeback; tilt; tournament. Jouſt is more proper.
None was either more grateful to the holders, or more noble in itſelf, than juſts, both with ſword and launce. Sidney.
What news? hold thoſe juſts and triumphs? Shakſpeare.
Among themſelves the tourney they divide,
In equal ſquadrons ranged on either ſide,
Then turn'd their horſes heads, and man to man,
And ſteed to ſteed oppos'd, the juſts began. Dryden.

To JUST. v. n. [jouſter, French.]

1. To engage in a mock fight; to tilt.
2. To puſh; to drive; to juſtle.

JU'STICE. n. ſ. [juſtice, French; juſtitia, Latin.]

1. The virtue by which we give to every man what is his due: oppoſed to injury or wrong. It is either diſtributive, belonging to magiſtrates; or commutative, reſpecting common tranſactions between men.
   O that I were judge, I would do juſtice. 2 Sam.
   The king-becoming graces,
   As juſtice, verity, temp'rance, ſtableneſs,
   I have no reliſh of them. Shakſpeare.
   The nature and office of juſtice being to diſpoſe the mind to a conſtant and perpetual readineſs to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of juſtice, it muſt be converſant about ſomething that is due to another. Locke.
2. Equity; agreeableneſs to right: as, he proved the juſtice of his claim.
3. Vindicative retribution; puniſhment: oppoſed to mercy.
   He executed the juſtice of the Lord. Deut.
   Let juſtice overtake us. Iſaiah.
   Examples of juſtice muſt be made, for terror to ſome; examples of mercy, for comfort to others. Bacon.
4. Right; aſſertion of right.
   Draw thy ſword,
   That if my ſpeech offend a noble heart,
   Thy arm may do thee juſtice. Shakſpeare.
5. [juſticarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgment. Cowell.
   And thou, Eſdras, ordain judges and juſtices, that they may judge in all Syria. 1 Eſdras.
6. JU'STICE of the King's Bench. [juſticiarius de Banquo Regis.] Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the reſt; wherefore he is alſo called capitalis juſticiarius Angliæ. His office eſpecially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, ſuch as concern offences committed againſt the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treaſons, felonies, mayhems, and ſuch like: but it is come to paſs, that he with his aſſiſtants heareth all perſonal actions, and real alſo, if they be incident to any perſonal action depending before them. Cowell.
   Give that whipſter his errand,
   He'll take my lord chief juſtice' warrant. Prior.
7. JU'STICE of the Common Pleas. [juſticiarius Communium Placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus juſticiarius communium placitorum. He with his aſſiſtants originally did hear and determine all cauſes at the common law; that is, all civil cauſes between common perſons, as well perſonal as real; for which cauſe it was called the court of common pleas, in oppoſition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are ſpecial, and appertaining to him only. Cowell.
8. JU'STICE of the Foreſt. [juſticiarius Foreſtæ.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's foreſt, committed againſt veniſon or vert: of theſe there be two, whereof the one hath juriſdiction over all the foreſts on this ſide Trent, and the other of all beyond. Cowell.
9. JU'STICES of Aſſiſe. [juſticiarii ad capiendas Aſſiſus.] Are ſuch as were wont, by ſpecial commiſſion, to be ſent into this or that country to take aſſiſes; the ground of which polity was the eaſe of the ſubjects: for whereas theſe actions paſs always by jury, ſo many men might not, without great hinderance, be brought to London; and therefore juſtices, for this purpoſe, were by commiſſion particularly authorized and ſent down to them. Cowell.
10. JU'STICES in Eyre. [juſticiarii itinerantes.] Are ſo termed of the French erre, iter. The uſe of theſe, in ancient time, was to ſend them with commiſſion into divers counties to hear ſuch cauſes eſpecially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I muſt imagine they were ſent abroad for the eaſe of the ſubjects, who muſt elſe have been hurried to the King's Bench, if the cauſe were too high for the country court. They differed from the juſtices of Over and Terminer, becauſe they were ſent upon ſome one or few eſpecial caſes, and to one place; whereas the juſtices in Eyre were ſent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commiſſion. Cowell.

11. Ju'STICES of Gaol Delivery. [juſticiarii ad Gaolas deliberandas.] Are ſuch as are ſent with commmiſſion to hear and determine all cauſes appertaining to ſuch as for any offence are caſt into gaol, part of whoſe authority is to puniſh ſuch as let to mainpriſe thoſe priſoners that by law be not bailable. Theſe by likelihood, in ancient time, were ſent to countries upon ſeveral occaſions; but afterward juſtices of aſſiſe were likewiſe authorized to this. Cowell.

12. Ju'STICES of Niſi Prius are all one now-a-days with juſtices of aſſiſe; for it is a common adjournment of a cauſe, in the common pleas, to put it off to ſuch a day: niſi prius juſticiarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas aſſiſas; and upon this clauſe of adjournment they are called juſtices of niſi prius as well as juſtices of aſſiſe, by reaſon of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Cowell.

13. Ju'STICES of Peace. [juſticiarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commiſſion, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom ſome, upon eſpecial reſpect, are made of the quorum, becauſe ſome buſineſs of importance may not be dealt in without the preſence of them, or one of them. Cowell.

The juſtice,
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes ſevere, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wiſe ſaws and modern inſtances,
And ſo he plays his part. Shakſpeare.

Thou haſt appointed juſtices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to anſwer. Shakſpeare.

The juſtices of peace are of great uſe: anciently they were conſervators of the peace; theſe are the ſame, ſaving that ſeveral acts of parliament have enlarged their juriſdiction. Bacon.

To Ju'STICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To adminiſter juſtice to any. Not in uſe.

As for the title of proſcription, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath juſticed himſelf, God forbid but that it ſhould endure an appeal to a war. Bacon.

Whereas one Styward, a Scot, was apprehended for intending to poiſon the young queen of Scots; the king delivered him to the French king, to be juſticed by him at his pleaſure. Hayward.

Ju'STICEMENT. n. ſ. [from juſtice.] Procedure in courts.

Ju'STICER. n. ſ. [from To juſtice.] Adminiſtrator of juſtice. An old word.

He was a ſingular good juſticer; and if he had not died in the ſecond year of his government, was the likelieſt perſon to have reformed the Engliſh colonies. Davies on Ireland.

Ju'STICESHIP. n. ſ. [from juſtice.] Rank or office of juſtice. Swift.

JUSTI'CIABLE. adj. [from juſtice.] Proper to be examined in courts of juſtice.

Ju'STIFIABLE. adj. [from juſtify.] Defenſible by law or reaſon.

Juſt are the ways of God,
And juſtifiable to men. Milton's Agoniſtes

Although ſome animals in the water do carry a juſtifiable reſemblance to ſome at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike. Brown's Vulgar Errours

Ju'STIFIABLENESS. n. ſ. [from juſtifiable.] Rectitude; poſſibility of being fairly defended.

Men, jealous of the juſtifiableneſs of their doings before God, never think they have human ſtrength enough. King Charles.

Ju'STIFIABLY. adv. [from juſtifiable.] Rightly; ſo as to be ſupported by right; defenſibly.

A man may more juſtifiably throw croſs and pile for his opinions, than take them up by ſuch meaſures. Locke

JUSTIFICA'TION. n. ſ. [juſtification, Fr. juſtificatio, low Latin.]

1. Abſolution.

I hope for my brother's juſtification; he wrote this but as an eſſay of my virtue. Shakſpeare.

2. Defence; maintenance; vindication; ſupport.

Among theological arguments in juſtification of abſolute obedience, was one of a ſingular nature. Swift

3. Deliverance by pardon from ſins paſt. Clarke.

In ſuch righteouſneſs
To them by faith imputed, they may find
Juſtification towards God, and peace
Of conſcience. Milton's Par. Loſt.

'Tis the conſummation of that former act of faith by this latter, or, in the words of St. Paul and St. James, the conſummation of faith by charity and good works, that God accepteth in Chriſt to juſtification, and not the bare aptneſs of faith to bring forth works, if thoſe works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth. Hammond.

JUSTIFICA'TOR. n. ſ. [from juſtify.] One who ſupports, defends, vindicates, or juſtifies.

Ju'STIFIER. n. ſ. [from juſtify.] One who juſtifies; one who defends or abſolves; one who frees from ſin by pardon.

That he might be juſt, and the juſtifier of him which believeth in Jeſus. Romans.

To JU'STIFY. v. a. [juſtifier, French; juſtifico, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to abſolve from an accuſation.

The law hath judg'd thee, Eleanor;
I cannot juſtify whom law condemns. Shakſpeare.

They ſay, behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and ſinners; but wiſdom is juſtified of her children. Matthew.

How can man be juſtified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman? Job.

There is an exquiſite ſubtilty, and the ſame is unjuſt; and there is a wiſe man that juſtifieth in judgment. Eccluſ.

Sins may be forgiven through repentance, but no act of wit of man will ever juſtify them. Sherlock

You're neither juſtified nor yet accus'd. Dryd

2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate.

When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindneſs unto him, he ſeeing himſelf confronted by ſo many, like a reſolute orator, went not to denial, but to juſtify his cruel behood Sidney.

What ſhe did, whatever in itſelf,
Her doing ſeem'd to juſtify the deed, Milton.
My unwilling fight the gods in force,
And that muſt juſtify our mad divorce. Denham.
Yet ſtill thy fools ſhall ſtand in thy defence,
And juſtify their author's want of ſenſe Dryd.

Let other juſtify them muſhons as they can, we are ſure we can juſtify that of our fathers by an uninterrupted ſucceſſion Atterbury.

3. To free from real ſin by pardon.

By him all that believe are juſtified from all things, from which ye could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes Acts.

To Ju'STLE. v. n. [from juſt, joſter, French.] To encounter; to clath, to ruſh againſt each other.

While injury of chance
Puts back leave taking, juſtles roughly by
All time of pauſe, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure. Shakſp. Troilus and Creſſida.

The chariot ſhall rage in the ſtreets, they ſhall juſtle one againſt another in the broad ways. Nahum.

Argo paſs'd,
Through Boſphorus, betwixt the juſtling rocks. Milton.

Late the clouds
Juſtling, or puſh'd with winds, rude in their ſhock,
Tine the ſlant lightning. Milton's Par. Loſt.

Not one ſtarry ſpark,
But gods meet gods, and juſtle in the dark. Lee.

Courtiers therefore juſtle for a grant;
And, when they break their friendſhip, plead their want. Dryden.

The more remote run ſtumbling with their fear,
And in the dark men juſtle as they meet. Dryden.

When elephant 'gainſt elephant did rear
His trunk, and caſtles juſtled in the air,
My ſword thy way to victory had ſhown. Dryden.

Was there not one who had ſet bars and doors to it, and ſaid, Hitherto ſhalt thou come, but no farther, and here ſhall thy proud waves be ſtaid; then might we well expect ſuch viciſſitudes, ſuch juſtlings and clatherings in nature. Woodward.

I thought the dean had been too proud
To juſtle here among a croud. Swift.

To Ju'STLE. v. a. To puſh; to drive; to force by ruſhing againſt it. It is commonly uſed with a particle following, as out or off.

Private and ſingle abilities ſhould not juſtle out and deprive the church of the joint abilities of many learned and godly men. King Charles.

Many excellent ſtrains have been juſtled off by their intruſions. Brown's Vulgar Err.

The ſurly commons ſhall reſpect deny,
And juſtle peerage out with property. Dryden.

It is not to be imagined that the incongruous alphabets and rhimes of writing can ever be juſtled out of their poſſeſſion of all libraries. Holder.

Running in the dark, a man may juſtle a poſt. Collier.

Abſent good, though thought on, not making any part of unhappineſs in its abſence, is juſtled out, to make way for the remembrance of thoſe uneaſineſſes we feel. Locke.

We juſtled one another out, and diſputed the poſt for a great while. Addiſon.

Ju'STLY. adv. [from juſt.]

1. Uprightly; honeſtly; in a juſt manner

Nothing can juſtly be delpiſed, that cannot juſtly be blamed: where there is no choice, there can be no blame. South.

With ignominy ſcourg'd, in open fight:
Next view the Tarquin kings; th' avenging ſword
Of Brutus juſtly drawn, and Rome reſtor'd. Dryden.

The goddeſs, ſtudious of her Grecians fate,
Taught them in laws and letters to excel,
In acting juſtly, and in writing well. Prior

2. Properly; exactly; accurately.

Their artful hands inſtruct the lute to ſound,
Then feet aſſiſt their hands, and juſtly beat the ground. Dryden.

JU'STNESS. n. ſ. [from juſt.]

1. Juſtice; reaſonableneſs; equity. Juſtneſs is properly applied to things, and juſtice to perſons; though we now ſay the juſtice of a cauſe, as well as of a judge.

It maketh unto the right of the war againſt him, whoſe ſucceſs uſeth commonly to be according to the juſtneſs of the cauſe for which it is made. Spenſer on Ireland.

We may not think the juſtneſs of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it. Shakſpeare.

2. Accuracy; exactneſs; propriety. In this ſenſe it is now moſt uſed.

I value the ſatisfaction I had in ſeeing it repreſented, with all the juſtneſs and gracefulneſs of action. Dryden.

I appeal to the people, was the uſual ſaying of a very excellent dramatick poet, when he had any diſpute with particular perſons about the juſtneſs and regularity of his productions. Addiſon.

To JUT. v. n. [Suppoſed to be corrupted from jet, perhaps from ſhoot.] To puſh or ſhoot into prominences; to come out beyond the main bulk.

Inſulting tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awleſs throwne. Shakſp.

All the projecte for jutting parts ſhould be very moderate, eſpecially the cornices of the lower orders. Wotton.

The land, if not reſtrain'd, had met your way,
Projected out a neck, and jutted to the ſea Dryd.

Broke by the jutting land on either ſide;
In double ſtreams the briny waters glide. Dryden.

It ſeems to jut out of the ſtructure of the poem, and be independent of it. Broome.

To JU'TTY. v. a. [from jut.] To ſhoot out beyond.

Then lend the eye a terrible aſpect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head
Like a braſs cannon: let the brow o'erwhelm it
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded baſe,
Swill'd with the wild and waſteful ocean. Shakſp.

JUVENILE. adj. [juvenilis, Latin.] Young; youthful.

Learning hath its infancy when it is almoſt childiſh; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then its ſtrength of years, when it is ſolid; and laſtly, its old age, when it waxeth dry and exhauſt. Bacon's Eſſays.

JUVENI'LITY. n. ſ. [from juvenile.]

1. Youthfulneſs.

The reſtauration of grey hairs to juvenility, and renewing exhauſted narrow, may be effected without a miracle. Glanville.

2. Light and careleſs manner.

Cuſtomary ſtrains and abſtracted juvenilities have made it difficult to commend and ſpeak credibly in dedications. Glanville.

JUXTAPOSITION. n. ſ. [juxtapoſition, Fr. juxta and poſitio, Latin.] Appoſition; the ſtate of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of ſolid bodies are held together by hooks, ſince the coherence of theſe will be of difficult conception; and we muſt either ſuppoſe an infinite number of them holding together, or at laſt come to parts that are united by a mere juxtapoſition. Glanville.

I'VY. n. ſ. [1513, Saxon; hedera, Lat.] A plant.

It is a paraſitick plant, ſending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is faſtened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great ſhare of its nouriſhment. Miller.

A gown made of the fineſt wool;
A belt of ſtraw, and ivy buds,
With coral claſps and amber ſtuds;
And if theſe pleaſures may thee move,
Come live with me and be my love. Raleigh.

Direct the claſping ivy where to climb. Milton.

JY'MOLD. adj. See GIMAL.

Their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips;
And in their pale dull mouths the jymold bit
Lies, foul with chew'd graſs, ſtill and motionleſs Shakſpeare.

K.

K. A letter borrowed by the Engliſh from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable ſound: as, keen, ken, kill. It is uſed after c at the end of words: as, knock, clock, crack, back, brick, ſtick, pluck, check, which were written anciently with c final; as, cloke, checke, tricke. It is alſo in uſe between a vowel and the ſilent e final: as, clocke, broke, brake, pike, duke, eke. It likewiſe ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, ſhook, leek. The Engliſh never uſe c at the end of a word. K is ſilent in the preſent pronunciation before n: as, knife, knee, knell.

KA'LENDAR. n. ſ. [now written calendar.] An account of time.

Let this pernicious hour
Stand as accurſed in the kalendar. Shakſpeare.

It was a hill
Of Paradiſe the higheſt; from whoſe top
The hemiſphere of earth, in cleareſt ken,
Stretch'd out to th' ampleſt reach of proſpect lay.
Milton.

He ſoon
Saw within ken a glorious angel ſtand. Milton.

Rude, as their ſhips, was navigation then;
No uſeful compaſs or meridian known:
Coaſting they kept the land within their ken,
And knew the north but when the pole-ſtar ſhone.
Dryden.

When we conſider the reaſons we have to think that what he lies within our ken is but a ſmall part of the univerſe, we ſhall diſcover an huge abyſs of ignorance. Locke.

KE'NNEL. n. ſ. [chenil, French.]

2. Favourable; beneficent.

He is kind to the unthankful and evil. Luke.

KIND. n. ſ. [cynne, Saxon.]

1. Race; generical claſs. Kind in Teutonick Engliſh anſwers to genus, and ſort to ſpecies; though this diſtinction, in popular language, is not always obſerved.

Thus far we have endeavoured in part to open of what nature and force laws are, according to their kinds. Hooker.

As when the total kind
Of birds, in orderly array on wing,
Came ſummon'd over Eden, to receive
Their names of thee. Milton's Par. Loſt.

That both are animalia,
I grant; but not rationalia;
For though they do agree in kind,
Specifick difference we find. Hudibras.

God and Nature do not principally concern themſelves in the preſervation of particulars, but kinds and companies. South's Sermons.

He with his wife were only left behind
Of periſh'd man; they two were human kind.
Dryden.

Some acts of virtue are common to heathens and chriſtians; but I ſuppoſe them to be performed by chriſtians after a more ſublime manner than among the heathens; and even when they do not differ in kind from moral virtues, yet differ in the degrees of perfection. Atterbury

He, with a hundred arts refin'd
Shall ſtretch thy conqueſt over half the kind. Pope

2. Particular nature.

[illegible]hould bleed upon a barbarous knife. Crashaw.
The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
The beast of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden's Æneid.
Ev'n in his sleep he starts, and fears the knife.
And trembling, in his arms, takes his accomplice wife. Dryden.
Pain is not in the knife that cuts us; but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourselves. Watts.

KNIGHT. n. f. [cniht, Sax. knecht, Germ. a servant, or pupil.]
1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the custom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges, to fight in the lists, and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of sir: as, sir Thomas, sir Richard. When the name was not known, it was usual to say sir knight.
That same knight's own sword this is of yore,
Which Merlin made. Spenser.
Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place. Spenser.
When every cause in law is right,
No squire in debt, and no poor knight. Shakesp.
This knight; but yet why should I call him knight,
To give impiety to this rev'rent title?
Dryden's Civil War.
No squire with knight did h[illegible]

2. Shakspeare uses it of a female; and it must therefore be understood in its original meaning, pupil or follower.
Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go. Shakspeare.
3. A champion.
He suddenly unties the poke,
Which out of it sent such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the pother;
So that the knights each other lost,
And stood as still as any post. Drayton.
Did I for this my country bring
To help their knight against their king,
And raise the first sedition? Denham.

KNIGHT errant. [chevalier errant.] A wandering knight; one who went about in quest of adventures.
Like a bold knight errant did proclaim
Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Denham.
The ancient errant knights
Won all their mistresses in fights;
They cut whole giants into fritters,
To put them into am'rous twitters. Hudibras.

KNIGHT errantry. [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.
That which with the vulgar passes for courage is a brutish sort of knight errantry, seeking out needless encounters. Norris.

KNIGHT of the post. A hireling evidence; a knight dubbed at the whipping post, or pillory.
There are knights of the post, and holy cheats enough, to swear the truth of the broadest contradictions, where pious frauds shall give them an extraordinary call. South.

KNIGHT of the shire. One of the representatives of a county in parliament: he formerly was a military knight, but now any man having an estate in land of six hundred pounds a-year is qualified.

To KNIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.] To create one a knight, which is done by the king, who gives the person kneeling a blow with a sword, and bids him rise up sir.
Favours came thick upon him: the next St. George's day he was knighted. Wotton.
The lord protector knighted the king; and immediately the king stood up, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward.
The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one pensioned Quarles. Pope.

KNI'GHTLY. adv. [from knight.] Befitting a knight; beseeming a knight.
Let us take care of your wound, upon condition that a more knightly combat shall be performed between us. Sidney.
How dares your pride presume against my laws:
As in a lifted field to fight your cause:
Unask'd the royal grant, no marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try.
Dryden.

KNI'GHTHOOD. n. f. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.
The sword which Merlin made,
For that his nourthling, when he knighthood swore,
Therewith to doen his foes eternal smart.
Fairy Queen.
Speak truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
And so defend thee Heaven and thy valour.
Shakspeare.
Is this the sir, who some waste wife to win,
A knighthood bought, to go a-wooing in?
Ben Jonson.
If you needs must write, write Cæsar's praise,
You'll gain at least a knighthood, or the bays.
Pope.

KNI'GHTLESS. adj. [from knight.] Unbecoming a knight. Obſolete.
